THE BAY AREA'S BEST... EVERY WEEK

ON THE COVER:

BREAKING THE SOUND BARRIER

Sonic Youth is often noisy and harsh, a clash of metal and wire and electricity. But the group's success may be a barometer for how the music industry treats "fringe" bands in the '90s. Gina Arnold reports (P. 55)

R U READY, CALIFORNIA?

The manufacturer of RU 486, the revolutionary new abortion pill, says the U.S., with its anti-abortion movement, isn't ready to accept it. An SF-based coalition is trying to change that (p. 19)

SETTING UP SHOP

Small business is the backbone of San Francisco, but starting a new business can be a nightmare of red tape and bureaucracy. Successful local merchants explain how to get through the permit maze. A special business quarterly (p. 13)

Lee Ranaldo, Steve Shelley, Thurston Moore and Kim Gordon of Sonic Youth play the Warfield Aug. 21st.

HUMANITIES PROGRAM

ACTIVIST ORIENTATION ■ MULTICULTURAL VISION ■ INTIMATE LEARNING ENVIRONMENT

New College of California is dedicated to an education that demystifies learning and empowers students through: a critical perspective that situates knowledge within social, political and historical contexts; an activist orientation that involves students directly in struggles for peace and justice; and a multicultural vision which celebrates and explores diverse communities of our society.

Fall registration—September 4th, (The last day of registration is the 20th)
Classes begin September 10th

Students work closely with a core faculty advisor to design their academic program.

■ An activist orientation. Students earn credit for social activism through internships in Bay Area political and cultural groups. Opportunities are available in a range of community, media, environmental, health and labor organizations.

■ An intimate learning environment. Small seminar style classes, close faculty-student interaction, and individually designed programs of study allow students to bring their voices into dialogue and participate fully in learning.

■ A critical, interdisciplinary, multicultural approach to the Humanities. We offer no ready-made solutions. Instead we challenge students to enact a constant inquiry that's both exploratory and interactive. Our community reflects multicultural complexity and alternative traditions of knowledge. We give voice to diverse and oppositional cultural—and historical experiences.

Fall Semester
 OPEN HOUSE
 WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 29
 7:00 PM
 766 VALENCIA ST.
 626-0884

■ New College accepts transfer credits from all accredited educational institutions (including junior & community colleges), and students can earn up to one full year's academic credit for life/work experience. New College is accredited by the Western Association of Schools and Colleges. Students are eligible for state and federal grants, loans & scholarships.

New College classes are all small seminar-style to facilitate student involvement.

Be Cool To Your Engine!

Your engine's coolant mixture is one of the two most important fluid levels you should regularly check. And it's not enough to make sure your radiator is full; the coolant should also be fresh and clean. If the coolant is old and contaminated, it can't provide the anti-corrosion and heat removal properties necessary. The result could be an overheated engine, a corroded thermostat or housing, premature water pump wear—or even a blown engine. Don't risk it! change your coolant at least once a year.

Sale prices subject to stocking items only. Add prices not applicable to special orders unless otherwise noted. If an item is unavailable, a raincheck will be issued. Items purchased up to stated limits are at sale price; thereafter at regular price. We reserve the right to limit quantities.

Deep mysteries

FOR A moment there, I was beginning to believe all these stories I keep hearing about how much the San Francisco Examiner is changing. I came back from vacation last weekend, and there, on the top of the editorial page, right across from the annual reprint of Old Man Hearst's "Song of the River," was an editorial titled "Legalize drugs."

Amazing. Made me wonder if life's deep mysteries aren't much like the rain and snow. But then I went back and read the past two weeks' papers, and I realized that, like the Song of the River, some things never change. On Sunday, July 29th, the Ex ran a major, front-page, "special report" called "San Francisco at economic crossroads." It looked for a moment as if it might be a serious, thoughtful look at something the daily papers in town have never really covered: The critical role small business plays in the city's economy. Instead, it turned out to be yet another rendition of the same, tired old downtown line.

You could tell the tone the stories would take from looking at the quote that was blown up in large type at the top of the first story — "Small business certainly is vital, but so are big businesses. A city is not a city unless it is... balanced." The source of this gem of wisdom: PG&E economist Tapan Monroe. Naturally, Monroe was a key player throughout the report. (Somehow, whenever the daily papers need an "expert" to talk about the Bay Area economy, they turn to the same useless hacks who have fouled our air with their dopey pronouncements for as long as I can remember. After all these years, after all the evidence that has come to light proving time after time that Tapan Monroe has no idea what he's talking about, I'm astounded to see that anybody still quotes him. One of life's great mysteries, I guess. Much like the rain and snow.)

The nut of The Ex's torrent of drivel appeared in the second paragraph of the lead story: "he statistics show that it would be foolish for The City to tie its economic future to small businesses." As Monroe announced, big businesses "enrich the community."

Actually, the statistics, and all other credible evidence, show just the opposite. As we've seen twice, in major studies by MIT's David Birch (studies the Ex didn't bother to quote), small businesses create all the net new jobs in San Francisco. And as we've shown repeatedly, big businesses like PG&E are robbing the community blind.

I'll go into all of this in more depth next week, but for now, there's good news for small business: On page 31, Heather Mackey explains how people who want to start a new business can wade through the red tape of the city's permit process. (By the way, Heather is now a staff writer, and Sandra Sheu is our new editorial assistant. The bad news is that Dan Roam, our associate art director and the only other BG employee sick enough to ride a British motorcycle, is heading off to Moscow. Rubber side down, comrade.)

Hannigan's shenanigans

WHAT ARE Willie Brown, the liberal Democratic Assembly speaker from San Francisco, and Tom Hannigan, one of his top lieutenants, doing trying to undermine the ability of grassroots activists to put initiatives on the local ballot?

The answer becomes clear when you look at whom their action would benefit: Entrenched incumbents, wealthy special-interest groups and big businesses. That is, the folks who finance Brown's campaigns (and support his private law practice).

Last week, Hannigan (D-Fairfield), the Democratic floor leader, resorted to a highly unusual procedural ploy to sidetrack, and perhaps kill, SB 1785, a bill by Senator Quentin Kopp (I-SF) that would lower to pre-1989 levels the number of signatures required to place an initiative on the ballot in San Francisco. Kopp called Hannigan's move a "dirty trick."

If it's successful, that dirty trick will have a lasting impact on local politics: Sponsors of measures like Prop. M, the 1986 growth-control measure, and district elections, will have a much harder time getting their reforms before the voters.

Until 1988, the number of signatures required to qualify an initiative in San Francisco was 10 percent of the number of people who voted in the last gubernatorial election. But last year, Registrar of Voters Germaine Wong discovered that an election-reform law sponsored by Assemblyman Peter Chacon (D-San Diego) had changed the standard to 10 percent of the registered voters, nearly doubling the number of signatures required. At the time, many legislators and city officials said the change was unintentional, a glitch in Chacon's bill (see "Kopp's fight for ballot access," Bay Guardian, 8/1/90).

SB 1785, which would restore the old standard, is opposed by the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce and the League of California Cities. But the Kopp bill passed the Assembly Elections, Reapportionment and Constitutional Amendments Committee by a 7-1 vote Aug. 8th.

That committee, chaired by Chacon, was the obvious place for a bill on election reform — indeed, it was the committee that handled Chacon's original bill. But when SB 1785 reached the Assembly floor, Hannigan, a member of Brown's leadership team, said he had been asked (he never said by whom) to reassign it to the Local Government Committee, which has no more hearings scheduled before the end of the session.

Hannigan did not return Bay Guardian telephone calls seeking comment on the move, but Michael Reese, Brown's press secretary, told the Bay Guardian that Hannigan acted "responsibly." Any suggestion, he said, that the move was an attempt to kill SB 1785 was "uncharitable."

The San Francisco Board of Supervisors has endorsed Kopp's bill, and has directed the city lobbyist to work for its passage. The speaker has no business opposing the measure. Hannigan, a top Brown ally, has no business pulling this sleazy move to scuttle it. For the bill to have a chance of survival, Farr must now schedule hearings and a vote in his committee, so the measure can get to the floor before the Aug. 31st deadline. We urge him to reject Hannigan's dirty trick and do so at once.

Brown's constituents in San Francisco, including the mayor and the supervisors, should demand that the speaker change his stance and support SB 1785.

Last chance to save our forests

THE FORESTS of Northern California, once considered an inexhaustible natural resource, are rapidly disappearing. Only 5 percent of the region's old-growth stands still remain intact, but younger forests also face rapid depletion. The culprit: overcutting by big logging companies.

Two state agencies, the Board of Forestry and the Department of Forestry, are required by law to control logging practices — to prevent overcutting and preserve wildlife habitats. But as we reported last week (see "Stumping for the Timber Industry," 8/8/90), the agencies have become almost an arm of the logging industry, repeatedly ignoring the 1973 Forest Practices Act.

Since 1983, a series of environmental lawsuits filed by the Environmental Protection and Information Center and the Sierra Club have exposed the government's scandalous favoritism toward industry. Those lawsuits have forced some reforms, but the logging frenzy continues. A comprehensive measure on the November ballot, dubbed the "Forests Forever" initiative, may be the last, best hope for stopping it.

Sponsored by a coalition of environmental groups, Forests Forever (Proposition 130), would bar the logging industry from cutting down forests faster than they grow back. That's a simple, reasonable idea, but compared to what is happening today, it would mark a dramatic policy change. Today, the Department of Forestry is approving more than 99 percent of the industry's logging requests. The department's own statistics show that in Mendocino County, industry is cutting down trees three times faster than new ones can grow. At that rate, half the state's healthy forests will disappear in 30 years. This spring, the department's director, Harold Walt, admitted that the department had been too biased in favor of industry, and announced a new policy, which amounted to a few small measures to protect the forests' watersheds and wildlife. The policy is a step in the right direction, but it doesn't address the basic threat to the state's forests. Put simply, if trees are cut faster than trees can grow, soon there won't be any trees left at all.

The timber industry recognizes what's happening, and is preparing for the future. The impact of overcutting has been the loss of older trees and a dependence on younger forests. But since 30-year-old trees are too small to produce regular boards, the industry is preparing to use them to make wood-fiber products instead. The industry is also setting up tree farms, where trees will be grown in rows like corn and harvested in 20 years. Many of these pesticide and fertilizer-dependent tree farms, the artificial forests of the future, will not be situated in Northern California, but in the agricultural regions of Southern California and other states. The Forest Practices Act was passed 17 years ago to preserve California's natural forests, where animals, streams and trees interact in natural cycles to create one of the most complex ecosystems on earth. The Forests Forever initiative would force the state to do what it refuses to do on its own — uphold the law. It deserves strong support.

No waiting

The news of "a huge waiting list... who want to get on the air" at Channel 25 (City-Visions) as reported by Laura Fraser in your July 25th Press Box section came as a surprise to me. I immediately checked our records and found no evidence of such a situation. Since you reported this situation as fact, you must have information to which I am not privy. Perhaps you can avail me of your documentation.

The foregoing notwithstanding, the way we would "get away with putting the KKK on," which we don't, is that CityVisions is a "public access" outlet in which we accept programs on a "first come, first served basis, without discrimination." It's a free speech forum where we let all comers speak their mind, no matter how repugnant we consider their message, because that's what free speech is.

I look forward to receiving your documentation of the "huge waiting list."

Barrett Giorgis
Director of Programming
Viacom Cablevision

nobody's watching. But that's not what the KKK has — and that's the basic problem.

Graffiti cartoonist

I hate to be a cranky nit-picking cartoonist, but in this case, I feel that I must. In your Cartoon Contest coverage (see Bay Guardian, 8/1/90), I was quoted as saying that two of my favorite cartoonists were "Tom Tolls" and "Keith Herriman."

Okay. First of all, it's Tom Toles and George Herriman (was the reporter thinking of Keith Haring?). Toles is a marvelous editorial cartoonist who recently won a Pulitzer Prize; the Examiner's Image ran a big article on him on July 22nd. Herriman never painted any subways, but in its day, his Krazy Kat strip was hailed by everyone from Jack Kerouac to Walt Disney, and it has influenced Berke (Bloom County) Breathed and Bill (Calvin & Hobbes) Watterson, to name just two contemporary cartoonists.

For the record

In the Aug. 8th issue: Due to an editing error, we misspelled Leonor Huper's name in "The first Sandinista." John Campbell, who was identified as the vice president of Pacific Lumber in a photo caption accompanying "Stumping for the Industry," has been promoted to president since the photograph was taken, and Pacific Lumber is located in Humboldt County, not Mendocino County. Photographer Marc Franklin's name was misspelled in the cover photo credit. We apologize for the errors.

Due to miscommunication between publicists and the Bay Guardian, the July 25th issue inaccurately stated that Jennifer Bryce's cabaret performance included "bare breasts" and nudity. It didn't, and we regret the error.

THE BAY GUARDIAN welcomes letters commenting on our coverage or other topics of local interest. Please keep all letters brief (we reserve the right to edit them for length as needed), type them, sign them (unsigned letters will not be published) and include a daytime telephone number of verification. We will consider reasonable requests to withhold the name of the signatory of a letter. Send all letters to: Letters, Bay Guardian, 520 Hampshire St., SF 94110. Letters may also be sent by computer via the Source (BBI214) or MCI Mail (address [San Francisco Bay Guardian]).

Settling S&L accounts: On Aug. 18th, the Christic Institute and the Citizen Labor and Energy Coalition kick off a door-to-door campaign for a petition calling for a full congressional investigation of connections between savings-and-loan fraud and government covert operations. In a series of articles appearing in the Houston Post between Feb. 4th and July 11th, journalist Pete Brewton reported links between the CIA and organized crime in the failures of 25 financial institutions, amounting to $75 million in losses. Brewton reported that the S&Ls served as money-laundering operations for covert military activities including aid to the Nicaraguan Contras.

The signature-gathering campaign is part of a national "Canvass for Truth." In 20 cities across the country, concerned citizens will hit the streets with this petition, which also demands criminal prosecution of people behind the collapse of the industry and the recovery of funds from those responsible for fraudulent activity. STATE HEADS FOR BATTLE ON FAMILY-CARE LEAVE

NOW THAT President George Bush has vetoed federal family-care legislation, California appears to be headed for its own legislative showdown over whether to guarantee workers the right to take time off to care for family members without losing their jobs.

The Family Rights Act, AB 77, sponsored by Assembly Whip Gwendolyn Moore (D-L.A.), is coming up for a vote in the Senate Appropriations Committee next week, after passing the Assembly last year. The bill would require employers of more than 25 people to grant workers unpaid leave of up to four months to care for family members. Employers would be barred from discriminating against people who took this leave, and would be required to give them the same or equivalent jobs when they returned.

Moore's aides say they are optimistic that the bill will pass, but note that Governor George Deukmejian vetoed similar legislation in 1988. In addition, last year the governor vetoed another bill that would have guaranteed employees the right to use their sick leave to care for ill children. Gubernatorial press spokesperson Anita McKenzie said the governor has not yet taken a position on AB 77.

Moore aide Amy King told the Bay Guardian AB 77 would have "very minor, if any, fiscal impact" on employers. In contrast to the federal legislation, the bill doesn't require employers to pay for health and other benefits during the unpaid leave. King said the cost of continuing employer-paid benefits was a major factor in business resistance to the federal bill.

Nevertheless, King acknowledged, California business groups, spearheaded by the state chapter of the National Federation of Independent Businesses, have been lobbying hard against the Family Rights Act. The California Chamber of Commerce and California Manufacturers Association have also been active in opposing the bill.

On the other side, King said, a network of supporting organizations — the California Federation of Labor, the Business and Professional Women's Organization, the American Association of University Women, the state Commission on the Status of Women, the National Council of Jewish Women, California Women Lawyers and the Service Employees International Union — has been waging an active publicity and letter-writing campaign to support family leave. They are mobilizing members to write to their state senators, and especially to the governor, urging them to enact the bill.

Supporters argue that guaranteed leave for family care is necessary, now that a majority of women, who have traditionally cared for children, the elderly and ill family members, hold full-time jobs. A fact sheet from Moore's office points out that "the United States is almost the only industrialized country with no parental leave policy," as a counter to charges that guaranteed family-care leave would hurt business.

LEGISLATORS FIGHT NEW LAW WEAKENING OPEN MEETINGS ACT

IN A CLASSIC demonstration of the problems of secret government, Governor George Deukmejian and five top legislators met behind closed doors earlier this month and moved to gut a key provision of the state's open-meetings law.

The result: Local agencies, boards and commissions won't have to post agendas in advance of their meetings and won't be required to include a public-comment period in each meeting. From San Diego to Siskiyou County, community activists and government watchdogs may be unable to determine whether an item of interest is going to be discussed at an upcoming meeting of the local city council, planning commission or sewer board. And whatever is discussed, the public may not have a chance to speak about it.

Press and public-interest groups and supportive legislators are now facing an uphill battle to restore the provisions of the Ralph M. Brown Open Meetings Act "suspended" under a bill that was negotiated in the secret meeting. SB 1333, a rider to the comprehensive budget bill, was reportedly intended to protect the state from a potential $2 million in claims from cities requesting reimbursements for the costs of complying with the Brown Act requirements.

The decision to include the bill in the budget package was reached in last-minute deliberations between the governor and four legislative leaders known as the Super Five. "This only surfaced as one of the demands accepted to break a record-long impasse," said Jeffrey Ruch, counsel to the Assembly Governmental Organization Committee, which is chaired by Richard Floyd (D-Lawndale). "From the time it was accepted to the time it was enacted, it took only two days. Everyone, including the author, was surprised."

But now that the dust has settled, and the press and public-interest groups have reacted vehemently to the

'I interpreted being singled out as a threat by the Salvadoran army. It could give [the right-wing] the impression that I'm a leftist troublemaker instead of a professional journalist.' — Chris Norton, U.S. journalist decision, even some members of the Super Five are having second thoughts. "It happened," said Michael Reese, press secretary to Assembly Speaker Willie Brown (D-SF). "The decision was made without a lot of thought and without full knowledge of its ramifications." Brown, Reese said, is among the many supporters of two bills now before the Legislature that would restore the Brown Act mandates.

The first, AB 3345, authored by Floyd, was amended to restore the suspended Brown Act provisions. It also contains language that would require government agencies to publish guidelines explaining how citizens may obtain documents under the Public Records Act. The second bill, SB 62, authored by Senator Ruben Ayala (D-Chino), would restore both the Brown Act suspension and another suspended mandate requiring law-enforcement agencies to send missing-children reports to the Justice Department.

But legislative insiders say it will be much harder to reverse the suspension now that it has become law than it would have been to defeat it during the negotiations process. And with the end of the session rapidly approaching, there may not be time to determine whether the $2 million cost estimate is accurate.

"We're trying to inquire how the Commission on State Mandates arrived at that figure," said Gene Erbin, counsel for Assemblyman Lloyd Connelly, who authored the 1985 legislation that added the agenda-posting and public-comment provisions to the Brown Act. "It's my understanding that they conducted a phone survey. We certainly don't believe it is anything near that amount."

But Erbin added that an analysis of the $2 million estimate could take weeks. "There's no time for reports," he said. "We adjourn on the 31st [of August]."

Without sufficient time to resolve the cost issue, however, both bills are facing an uphill battle. They will both require a two-thirds vote, and that, according to Ruch, may be difficult to win in the Assembly, where a strong Republican caucus helped hold up the budget originally. And if it does pass both houses of the Legislature, it faces a likely gubernatorial veto. "The key to this is Deukmejian," Ruch said. "We are asking the governor to reverse his position."

In addition, the process has been complicated by election-year politics. Because the missing-child provisions of Ayala's bill would add $11.5 million to its cost, Floyd's bill could be much more palatable to the governor and is favored by public-interest and press groups, like the California Newspaper Publishers Association.

But Ayala faces a tough re-election race and legislative insiders say he has been given SB 62 to carry in an effort to bolster his image. For that reason, sources say, Ayala's bill has been put on the fast track while Floyd's bill languishes in the suspense file awaiting an Aug. 22nd vote.

"There's no reason why they can't both go to the governor," Ruch said, "but the Ayala bill will probably go first." There is some chance Floyd may even amend out the Brown Act provisions of his bill.

The impact of Ayala's race on the success of his legislation is a subject of speculation. Republicans have no interest in handing Ayala a major success, but they also are reluctant to appear to oppose open government, particularly in the face of a strong media campaign to restore the suspended Brown Act provisions. "It's become sort of a press bill," said one staffer who requested anonymity, "and the press always gets the last word."

— Craig McLaughlin

PS: The Northern California Chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists has urged all public agencies subject to the Ralph M. Brown Act to ignore the temporary suspension of certain requirements of the act by SB 1333.

"In the words of the act," said a prepared statement released by the chapter, "the people, in delegating authority, do not give their public servants the right to decide what is good for the people to know and what is not good for them to know."

"We urge each public agency to take prompt and formal action obligating the agency to conform to all the notice, agenda and public comment requirements of the Brown Act until the Legislature has corrected its affront to the people of California."

U.S. REPORTER FINGERED BY SALVADORAN MILITARY

CHRIS NORTON, a freelance reporter in El Salvador whose stories in this publication and others have been highly critical of Salvador's military and its death squads, is now afraid that he might become a victim of right-wing violence himself, since the government named him in a press release for spreading "misleading information" about the Salvadoran High Command.

The Salvadoran military press office issued the release in June as a response to a scathing report on human rights in Salvador by the U.S. Congressional Arms Control and Foreign Policy Caucus. The report, "Barriers To Reform: A Profile of El Salvador's Military Leaders," named two journalists, Norton and reporter Joel Millman of the New York Times, among its sources of information.

Since 1984, Norton has been reporting from San Salvador for the Christian Science Monitor, Time Magazine and the alternative press. One of his articles for the Monitor was cited in 68 footnotes in the congressional report.

Salvadoran right-wing newspapers, Norton has left Salvador for a few months, but plans to return soon. Millman has also left the country for an assignment in New York City.

"I interpreted being singled out [in the press release] as a warning and a threat by the army," said Norton. "This was a very dangerous action on their part and could very easily give them [right-wing death squads] the impression that I am some kind of leftist troublemaker, instead of being a professional journalist, which is what I am."

Norton has good reason to be fearful for his life. The Committee to Protect Journalists based in New York says at least 53 working journalists/writers/editors were killed during 1989. While not all 53 were killed in action, 35 were murdered in Latin American hot spots. Of those, 32 were killed in Colombia, El Salvador, Guatemala, Panama and Peru.

Overall, El Salvador proved to be the most dangerous assignment in the world last year for reporters and photo-journalists, as 14 casualties were recorded there. Interestingly, the journalists killed there included Ignacio Ellacuria, Ignacio Martin-Baro and Segundo Montes, three of the six Jesuit priests who, along with their cook and her daughter, were assassinated last November at the University of Central America in San Salvador, during the height of the rebel offensive.

The Salvadorans are not the only ones to label Norton a subversive. In 1988 the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador characterized Norton as a "leftist journalist" in a press summary, because of a story he published in In These Times. Norton requested and got a public apology from the embassy for endangering him.

Norton decided more serious action was needed this time around. He asked the U.S. Embassy to issue an official protest to the Salvadoran military, called CPJ and the Salvadoran Press Association for help and wrote a public letter criticizing the Salvadoran military press office. In the letter, which was published in several Salvadoran newspapers, Norton named Major Mauricio Chavez Caceres of the press office as being responsible for the press release.

A representative for the State Department, who spoke on condition of anonymity and characterized the incident as "serious and unfortunate," said the U.S. Embassy followed up on Norton's complaint and contacted the Salvadoran military to protest the release.

But the source also criticized Norton for doing "essentially the same thing to Major Chavez Caceres that he complained the military did to him. By specifically naming him in the letter he sent to the newspapers, he could have made the major a target for the left here," the source said.

CPJ's Joel Solomon said he considered the incident involving Norton, Millman and the Salvadoran military "very serious. It could very easily make Chris a target and put his life in jeopardy."

Solomon also said that CPJ sent an official letter of protest to Salvadoran President Alfredo Christiani and Major Chavez Caceres and asked them to refrain from issuing such releases in the future.

This Week AT CITY HALL

BY JIM BALDERSTON

DISASTER OF THE WEEK

Most of us already know from personal experience how hard it is to find a decent and affordable place to live. But a new legislative task force report may surprise you with its alarming conclusions about the affordable-housing crisis in California.

In August, a task force on the changing family, co-chaired by Oakland Assemblyman Tom Bates, and made up of experts in education, health, social services and employment, issued its second report, "Housing California's Families: The End of the American Dream." The report, which calls on the Legislature to take fast and furious action, says "the inability to find decent housing at an affordable price is crippling many California families."

"Two trends — changing family demographics and a sharp reduction in the availability of funding for affordable housing — are responsible for the crisis."

The state's housing policies were designed for Ozzie-and-Harriet households, which are quickly becoming a thing of the past. Today, households also consist of single parents, adults with no children, the elderly and extended immigrant families.

Just 17 percent of California households can afford a median-priced house, and the percentage is shrinking every day. In the Bay Area, the figure is 10 percent. Meanwhile, the cost of a median-priced home in California surpassed $200,000 in 1989.

For renters, the picture is just as bleak. Between 1978 and 1985, the number of low-income rental units declined by 1 million, while the number of low-income renters grew by 3.6 million.

And while the "housing crisis affects all but the wealthiest families," the hardest hit group is the homeless.

Today, "30 to 40 percent of the homeless population are families, and families are the fastest-growing segment of the homeless population."

Bates said he wants to make California a national model for family housing. The report recommends "controversial" measures, like imposing sanctions against cities that fail to develop affordable housing, repealing Article 34 of the Constitution, which mandates voter approval for low-income housing, strengthening unfair-eviction laws and establishing a state fund to help homebuyers.

Bates' task force is bringing much-needed attention to a state crisis. Unfortunately, as San Francisco's Mission Bay project shows, big developers, the Mayor's Office and the mainstream media too often see affordable housing as a radical cause they can ignore.

But as the report reveals, the housing crisis affects most Californians — suggesting that politicians won't get away with ignoring it much longer.

Hastings' empty lot

IF YOU walk down Golden Gate Avenue between Larkin and Hyde streets, you will notice a rather large hole in the ground.

That hole was made when Hastings College of the Law, which owns the site, tore down four buildings in the wake of last year's earthquake.

Hastings is planning to build a parking lot on the site sometime in the near future, and when it does, expect sparks to fly. If a private developer were to put a parking lot in the space, it would have to comply with local zoning and planning codes. Hastings, however, is a state institution, and has claimed in the past that it does not have to comply with those codes.

Hastings has also asserted that it does not have to prepare an environmental impact report for the parking lot. Community groups challenged Hastings on the matter.

Randy Shaw, executive director of the Tenderloin Housing Clinic, says he expects a fight on the issue. "They have to have an EIR for the parking lot," he said. "We may have to go into court to get it."

Meanwhile, Hastings has filed a cross-complaint with the Superior Court, seeking a complete exemption from all planning and zoning codes in the Tenderloin. Shaw said if the court granted the exemption, and the ruling was upheld through the appellate process, Hastings would be free to tear down the remaining housing on the site — some 200 low-income residential hotel rooms — without meeting city requirements to replace the housing. After that, the school would be free to build any kind of structure it chooses. "If Hastings were to get the exemption, they could build a highrise building in the middle of the Tenderloin," Shaw said.

The city could force Hastings to comply with local codes, or at least force a compromise on the development of the site. But according to Shaw, the city has been absolutely silent on the issue.

"The Mayor's Office has not been involved in any way with Hastings on the disposition of the site," Shaw said.

Free Johnny Spain

SINCE HIS release from prison in 1988, ex-Black Panther and convicted murderer Johnny Spain has performed magnificently as a parolee, says his attorney Dennis Riordan. He has taught a very popular course, "Society Behind Bars," at Stanford University, has lectured at nine other universities and holds a steady job working with the homeless.

And even though a probation report says he "shows no evidence... that he would be a danger to society or other individuals," the state Board of Prison Terms is making a court move to put him back behind bars.

The board appears to be miffed because it was a federal court, and not the state board itself, that found Spain "suitable" for parole in 1988.

The flap over Spain's parole goes back to the 1971 San Quentin uprising, which left three guards and three prisoners dead. In 1986, Spain's conviction for taking part in the uprising was overturned, but at a 1987 parole hearing, the board refused to forget about the San Quentin riot, and denied Spain's parole.

Two years later, a court decided that Spain's 20 years in prison for a murder he committed as a teenager was enough (Most teenage murderers spend about ten years in jail, Riordan says.), and released him.

On Aug. 22nd, the board, which doesn't like to be upstaged by the courts, will hold another parole hearing for Spain. If the board decides to throw him back in the joint, Riordan says he'll be back in federal court to free Johnny Spain. Meanwhile, you can protest the board's mean-spirited persecution of the Spain by writing to: Board of Prison Terms, C/O Dennis Riordan, 523 Octavia Street, SF, 94102.

Aquarium votes

THE UNDERWATER World aquarium project will face two key votes within the next week, and either of them could stop the project in its tracks.

First, on Aug. 16th, the Bay Conservation and Development Commission will vote on whether to approve the project.

Underwater World would consist of a 707,000-gallon walk-through aquarium located next to Pier 39. The project is predicted to attract 1.5 million people a year.

Opponents of the project argue that it would cause increased congestion in the already gridlocked wharf area.

If the 27-member BCDC panel approves the project, the Port Commission will then consider an amendment to the Pier 39 lease, to allow the aquarium to be built on the site. The Port Commission will probably approve the lease amendment, as it has indicated it supports the project. It will then go to the Board of Supervisors for approval.

The BCDC meeting will be held at 1 pm at the Army Corps of Engineers Bay Model, 2100 Bridgeway, Sausalito. For more information, call BCDC at 557-3686.

The Port Commission hearing will be held at 4 pm at the Port Commission hearing room in the Ferry Building, SF. Info.: 274-0400.

The Prop. M exemption

LAST WEDNESDAY, five supervisors signed and submitted for the November ballot a proposition that would exempt the Mission Bay project from Proposition M guidelines.

Prop. M, passed in 1986, sets an annual limit of 475,000 square feet in office construction. Mission Bay will include some 5.7 million square feet of office space.

As it stands now, an uneasy truce exists between community and housing advocates and Catellus, formerly Santa Fe Pacific Realty, over the language of the initiative, which says that Catellus wants the exemption so it can build more affordable housing and clean up toxic waste.

According to Rene Casenave, a member of the Coalition of Community Housing Organizations who was involved in the debate over the ballot language, his group is reserving judgment on the exemption. "We are in a state of armed neutrality with Catellus," he said. "We have agreed not to oppose the measure yet, but have not agreed to support it either." One issue is how much affordable housing Catellus is willing to build.

If the Prop. M exemption is voted down in November, Catellus will be forced to go back to the drawing board and find another way to move the project forward.

This week at City Hall appears weekly in the Bay Guardian. Tips, information and suggestions for upcoming events and items can be sent in care of Jim Balderston, Bay Guardian, 520 Hampshire St., SF 94110, or leave a message at 255-3100.

Ad Liberation

By Laura Fraser

IT WAS depressing last year when Ms magazine sputtered and died, even though it hadn't been worth reading in a long time. It was upsetting because it meant that a magazine with just the palest shade of feminism couldn't make it, even if it put movie stars on the cover and tailored its editorial copy for well-groomed executive women who would buy all the feminine products advertised in its pages.

When Ms first appeared in 1972, it became a defining voice of the women's movement. It was fresh, radical and irreverent, and it was the only magazine around for women who wanted more. More than hints on how to wear makeup and get boyfriends, for instance. And more than intellectual articles, in the Atlantic or Harper's, that fed rational brains but forgot that such brains could be female. We wanted a magazine that addressed us as smart women struggling in a time of social flux, and that spoke to us in a woman's voice.

We got that, for a time, with Ms.

Then Ms started to change. First it became boring, stuck in '70s sisterspeak when the '80s were well upon us. As the magazine lost its dynamic edge, it seemed, so did the movement. Then Ms became contradictory, full of feminist rhetoric and ads for "freedom fit" pantyhose. Finally, after the Australian company Matilda Publications took over, Ms became a complete parody of itself. It looked — and read — like an annual report for insecure white businesswomen.

Take its last issue last November (please). On the cover is a photo of that Fatal Attraction femme fatale, Glenn Close, with the coverline "Move Over, Meryl: Glenn's Got It!" That's supportive, sisterly sentiment for you. Inside, the articles are indistinguishable from the average fare in Elle or Working Woman. "The Cutting Edge: Women are offering up their heads and yelling cut!" seems to be big news.

Much of the magazine is devoted to making money, from "Life in the fax lane" to articles on female stockbrokers and women entrepreneurs who hire their husbands (there's that feminist twist).

Then there were the ads. Most of them featured those beautiful blonde anorexics, whose images — didn't we learn somewhere? — are so oppressive. In one, the Sheer Energy pantyhose woman has set down her shopping bags to play hopscotch in her high-heeled pumps.

In another, an executive woman strides down the street carefree because she knows her curling iron will shut itself off automatically. There are four ads for mysterious methods for losing weight. And on the back, there's a glamorous shot of a black woman smoking.

If Ms had been just another lousy magazine, it could have been ignored along with the rest at the checkout counter. But since it had set itself up as a magazine that defined the women's movement, it was, as I said, completely depressing.

Now there's the new Ms. It's 100 pages thick, with no blondes, and no ads. That alone probably makes it worth a subscription. It's full of long-lost feminist names and a lot of new international ones. There are articles by and about all those women who got squeezed out of the old Ms — poor, lesbian, rural, senior, Native American, African American and otherwise brunette. Editor Robin Morgan calls it "unashamedly feminist," and promises articles on ecofeminism, spirituality, personal politics and feminist scholarship, plus its old "No Comment" section, showcasing sexist ads.

This new Ms has the good sense to make its first "No Comment" section about ads that appeared in old Ms.

It also has a great article by Gloria Steinem on how advertising ruined the old Ms and shapes most women's magazines in a way few men's magazines would allow. It chronicles her ten-year losing struggle to get advertisers to recognize that women buy cars and electronics and Scotch and other things advertisers seem to think only men would touch. She describes how Ms tried to get ads that presented African American, Hispanic, Asian and other diverse images, but to no avail: "In an exact parallel of the fear that marketing a product to women will endanger its appeal to men, the response is usually, 'But your [white] readers won't identify.'"

Ms also tried to hit up advertisers of more traditional female products — food, fashion and makeup — but they wouldn't buy space without more traditional female editorial copy. Estee Lauder, Steinem says, wouldn't advertise in Ms because they were selling "a kept-woman mentality." Revlon pulled its ads from an issue that featured a cover story on Soviet women under glasnost. "Why?" Steinem writes. "Because the Soviet women on our cover are not wearing makeup."

Steinem points out that advertisers of "feminine" products expect "complementary copy" in women's magazines — although they do not expect the same in general-interest magazines. "The same food companies place ads in People with no recipes. Cosmetics companies support The New Yorker with no regular beauty columns." Then she details the history of how women's magazines have let their content be controlled by men since advertising began in The Ladies' Home Journal and Godey's Lady's Book in the 1880s. These magazines have always taken on the patronizing tone that women need "how-to" articles to do anything; the reality is, they're "how-to-buy" articles. The habit has become so entrenched that many companies have a policy of not advertising without complementary editorial copy.

According to Steinem, Bristol-Myers stipulates that ads be placed next to "a full page of compatible editorial." Maidenform won't let its bras be advertised next to any negative articles on things like illness, disillusionment or being fat. The De Beers diamond company won't put its ads next to hard news or articles that are otherwise anti-romance. Proctor & Gamble is more political; its articles can't be placed in any issue with any material on gun control, abortion, the occult, cults or the disparagement of religion (and only cautiously next to articles covering sex or drugs).

Cosmetic companies, fashion designers and sellers of hair products all want complementary copy. That's why women's magazines are stuffed with inane articles on what to wear, with all the designer names and store addresses attached. It's part of the deal. Steinem went through several issues of recent women's magazines and found the following statistics on editorial copy vs. ads and complementary copy:

- Glamour: 339 pages total; 65 non-ad or ad-related
- Vogue: 319 / 38
- Redbook: 173 / 44
- Family Circle: 180 / 33
- Elle: 326 / 39
- Lear's: 173 / 65

It's no wonder that as Ms started accepting more and more ads, it became a worse and worse magazine. Without ads, it has a chance. But the tone of the new Ms suggests a '70s-style "sisterhood" that masks disagreements among feminists. Few of the articles have any real cutting-edge analysis. If Ms wants to take on the task of redefining feminism, it can't rely on the "Why I [Still] Want a Wife" routine that is almost 20 years old.

This new Ms is sisterly and full of good will. But without ads, it needs, and has license, to be more hard-hitting. It needs to take on current controversies and speak to the changing lives of women in the '90s.

AND WHAT ABOUT THIS: Why is it that when KGO-TV puts a "Middle East Expert," Laina Farhat, on the 11 o'clock news (Aug. 8th), no one tells us why she's an expert? Is she from the Hoover Institute? The CIA? Did she live in Baghdad for a year? Has she written a book? KGO says she's not affiliated with any university, but perhaps viewers need more context. Can we trust any "expert?"

And why do most news shows only present the views of people who are gun-ho to defend "our interests" in the Middle East, debating only the fine points of whether or not "we" would use tactical nuclear weapons. How about putting someone on who thinks we have no business there, and doesn't want "us" to start a war? Just for a little change.

GAY MATTERS

They call it 'living with AIDS'

By David Israels

I'M SUPPOSED to write this column every week. But anyone who pays even cursory attention to these matters knows there are many weeks when a little squiggle at the bottom of this page announces that I'm "on assignment" or "taking the week off."

If only it were so.

The truth, if it were told, would read more like this: "Despair has again made it impossible for David Israels to write his column this week," or "The ghostly memories of too many dead friends sent David Israels to his bed this week." We don't say those things because it would take a whole column — like this one — to explain what the words mean.

In a sane world, bad-day blues are not the stuff editors usually settle for as an excuse for missing a deadline or committing that most unpardonable of journalistic sins: deserting an assignment. But as luck would have it, I have an editor who seems to have some inkling about the crazy world I now inhabit.

It's a world where that most ironic of phrases — "living with AIDS" — has taken on its own special meaning.

For me, living with AIDS means two of my three closest friends are dead. And if the third — who is infected — dies, I will know what it's like for people in their 80s or 90s to have outlived almost all of those they held dearest.

It also means that on some days, the black mood weighs so heavily on my limbs that the walk from couch to kitchen feels like the Bataan death march. It means that on some mornings, my dead call to me so beseechingly that the idea of trying to escape into work strikes me as obscene. It means that my boyfriend, William, and I have watched helplessly as the horrors of the epidemic built a wall between us. It means expecting to die before the century does.

A LITTLE more than a year ago I wrote a story — "AIDS: Notes of a Survivor" — that chronicled the 14 months it took the virus to suck the life out of my friend Jeffrey Byers. In that piece, I said the experience left me feeling like one of the "walking wounded."

Since then, the virus — quickly and with almost no warning — stole the life of my friend David Semrit. And now it threatens my last dear friend.

I no longer feel like one of the walking wounded. Though I often recoil from it, more and more I think of myself as one of the undead: I take up space in the land of the living, but most of my spirit lies buried with my friends.

I know these aren't politically or psychologically acceptable ideas to express, though I suspect that for many of those whose lives the epidemic has torched, the despair I describe is an all-too-common response. Still, the activists will likely demand to know where my anger is. And the shrinkers would probably try to reassure me that I'm just working through my grief.

To the activists I say that I'm glad somebody's doing it, but that's not my way.

As for the shrinkers, I would just say that their nostrums have never seemed to hold out much hope for curing hearts sickened by the horrors of epidemic or holocaust.

If, however, you think I'm guilty of indulging in nothing but despair, I can prove I haven't lost my sense of humor — black as it may be. Just the other day, for instance, I phoned my friend Marcy, explaining that I didn't really want to talk to her, but she was the only friend I could find in my telephone book who wasn't dead.

My losses, of course, aren't unique. I've heard or read about gay men who've seen dozens of friends die. Though whenever I hear that, I'm not so much struck at the enormity of the person's loss as bewildered that anyone could have so many close friends.

In any case, these deaths signal more than the loss of friendships. As with many other gay people, my closest friends were also my chosen family. Again, like many other gays, that fact took on greater significance because my biological family was largely absent: My mother and father are dead, I'm an only child and the tether to my aunts, uncles and cousins has long since frayed thin.

When my mother died four years ago, I spoke only half jokingly about how I had become an orphan who had lost his childhood home in the East. But I was also solaced by the fact that David Semrit's Lower East Side apartment — a tiny bedroom on a lightless airwell that we called the "troll room" — was always there for me.

The idea of the troll room made me feel secure. It was my safe harbor, the place I would go to if things got really bad. I couldn't imagine it not being there. After all, David had been in that apartment for 15 years. I just assumed he always would. And that if I really wanted, I could go home again.

IT MAY seem corny to you, but about the only thing I've learned from all the AIDS carnage I've seen in the last few years is that when a loved one dies, the part of you that you shared with that person dies too. And that, perhaps, is the most painful thing to endure.

When Jeffrey died, the little kid in me, that childhood spark that makes so much of life worth living, withered. We loved each other in large part because we were the little brothers neither of us ever had. We shared the same impish delights, silly wordplay and sillier private jokes. It always seemed appropriate that for most of the five years I knew Jeffrey, he worked in a toy store or, as we liked to say, he "sold toys to little guys."

David and I called each other Myrna and had been sisters since college. We both loved the theater, the written word, a Manhattan on the rocks and Frank Sinatra, the crooner, not the person. Not that we'd always been simpatico. In college he chose speed and I opted for qualualdes.

Visiting him on Second Avenue was like taking a post-graduate seminar in popular culture. He knew everything from ballet to Bette Davis. In my last visit, we saw 18 shows in 21 days.

His apartment was stuffed with thousands of records, hundreds of videotapes, hundreds of audio cassettes, three cats and some of the biggest cockroaches I ever had the displeasure to see.

He's probably the only queen I know who didn't think I was out of my mind when I stopped our umpteenth viewing of Boys in the Band and checked the play script to see how Miss Crowley spelled the name in the line "Uh-oh. Yvonne the Terrible is back."

When David died, I took 45 videos, 50 cassettes and his favorite cat, Renee, back with me. But none of that stuff helped. For me, the brightest light in the big city had gone out forever.

Not long ago, when the blue meanies were at their worst, I had a dream about my father, who had died, after battling Parkinson's disease, when I was 12. In the dream, my father told me about his pain and fear. When I woke I realized that was something he'd never talked about all through the terrible two years of his illness. And that his silence only made his suffering worse.

When I write a column like this, I'm trying to break the silence. I doubt it will lessen the pain and fear, but perhaps it will keep the suffering from growing.

Battle of the booze tax

California's alcohol industry is spending millions on a campaign to defeat the 'nickel-a-drink' initiative in November

By Ralph Jennings

CALIFORNIA'S ALCOHOL industry is mixing political Molotov cocktails in an effort to blow away a November ballot initiative that would raise the alcohol tax to pay for badly needed substance-abuse services.

An industry-sponsored campaign organization, Taxpayers for Common Sense, has produced an explosive batch of factually inaccurate and misleading television and radio spots, say supporters of the initiative. The state's largest wineries, breweries, distilleries and liquor retailers have collectively given the group $13 million thus far, the organization says.

Dubbed the "Nickel-a-Drink" initiative, Proposition 134 would raise about $730 million a year in surtaxes from the alcohol industry to fund drug and alcohol treatment and prevention services and other health programs. But the ads blatantly mischaracterize the initiative by saying it will bring increases in sales and income taxes for all taxpayers.

Sponsored by Consumers Union (the national group that publishes Consumer Report), the California Association of Highway Patrolmen, the California Coalition of Mental Health, several county boards of supervisors and other groups, Prop. 134 is designed to bring California's alcohol taxes into line with other states.

The Alcohol Tax Initiative Committee reports that California's penny-a-gallon tax on wine is the lowest in the nation, while the state's four-cent beer tax ranks second lowest and its $2 hard-liquor tax sixth lowest. Prop. 134 would sharply raise those taxes to the fourth-highest level in the nation, the committee says.

Taxpayers for Common Sense says the alcohol industry will pass the surtax charges onto consumers through higher retail prices. The group adds higher prices will reduce sales and consumption of alcohol, particularly among casual drinkers who may choose to abstain rather than pay more for their spirits.

To defeat the nickel-a-drink initiative, the group's heavily financed campaign has come up with an array of ads that have drawn strong criticism from Prop. 134 backers.

"It's a big and vicious campaign of lies against us," said Andrew McGuire, a Bay Area campaign representative on the Alcohol Tax Initiative Committee. "It's about time we start giving priority to the underprivileged in California society," he added — like substance abusers, drug-addicted infants and the mentally ill.

AIRING DAILY on all local television networks, particularly during San Francisco Giants home games, on a few cable channels and on many Bay Area radio stations, the industry ads claim that all California taxpayers will have to subsidize the programs of Prop. 134.

The ads target a provision in the initiative that freezes current state funding for drug-related programs at the 1989-90 level when the funds roll in from Prop. 134. The provision is aimed at ensuring that state politicians won't just use the alcohol tax money to replace current program funds, and shift those funds to other things.

The ads, particularly prime-time television commercials and literature mailed upon toll-free telephone request, try to convince the public that guaranteeing $2.1 billion for these programs will lead to tax increases for everyone.

Since the proposition will raise only about $700 million, the ads say, the taxpayers will have to come up with the rest to match $2.1 billion.

Here's part of a July 5th radio advertisement that aired on almost all Northern California's major radio stations. In this commercial, two people are talking over dinner, discussing "bait and switch" tactics folded into the initiative.

"Truth is, it raises $700 million a year," the man says.

"Right. But because it locks in those pet programs, it requires spending about 2 billion," the woman responds.

"Wait a minute, that's more than a billion dollars short."

"And who pays the shortfall?"

"Who do you think?"

"We do!"

"Yeah, with income and sales taxes."

What the ads don't say is that the public is already paying $2.1 billion for alcohol, drug and mental health programs, and will certainly continue to pay that amount in the future regardless of a new surtax. The initiative would simply make additional funds available.

"They're saying the initiative's going to raise income taxes and the sales tax,"

The ads target a provision in the initiative that freezes state funding for drug-related programs when the funds roll in from Prop. 134.

said Jim Shultz, a policy analyst for Consumers Union. "That's just patently untrue."

"What [the freeze] really is is a guarantee that politicians don't turn [existing state funding] into a shell game," he said. "We want to make sure they don't put it into new prisons or legislators' salary increases."

Scoffing at the ads, McGuire recalled the advertising strategy he learned at a campaign study group last year.

"The [instructors] asked what triggers an emotional response" in ordinary people and answered that taxation and spending cuts to helpless people are their most salient emotional buzzes, McGuire said.

One prime-time and early morning TV ad airing statewide shows an elderly woman in a rest home blaming Prop. 134 for cuts in funding for senior citizens. "Her plea is that Prop. 134 is going to increase taxes and immediately decrease seniors' funding," McGuire said.

Opposition groups are also sending voters copies of the measure with certain sections highlighted to illustrate why the bill should be voted down at the polls. The literature says that in the future, drug treatment may no longer be needed, but it will be "virtually impossible to stop or reduce the proposition. Even if it proves ineffective or unworkable."

McGuire responds that there will always be a need to serve drug-dependent people, and that if this initiative backfires, the legislature can vote to eliminate it.

The ad that McGuire says most riled him was a network TV spot picturing a person complaining that the tax goes toward financing aircraft. The proposition makes funds available for high-way emergencies requiring Medi-Vac. "They are talking about Medi-Vac, but in this TV ad they call it aircraft," he said.

Not surprisingly, Taxpayers for Common Sense rejects these charges of deception. "Basically the ads are pointing out the most serious flaws in the proposition — the automatic budget increase," said spokesperson Tom Thompson. "You start looking at where the money comes from [to pay for these increases], and you find they have to cut spending from the general fund or raise taxes."

Drinking Prop. 134 backers under the table, Taxpayers for Common Sense predicts it will have about $30 the receiving end of this measure and you can't have that magnitude of a tax without a loss in sales," he said. "You shouldn't single out one or two industries for a societal problem."

Bill Schreiber, executive director of the Costa Mesa-based Beer Drinkers of America, added that "they're penalizing the vast majority of people who are responsible," that is, the 80 million people in the United States who he says drink beer without injury to their physical or mental health. "We're diametrically opposed to a nickel-a-drink initiative. If you need tax dollars, don't create a scapegoat and soak them."

Shultz, on the other hand, insisted that the alcohol business is responsible for addiction and drunk driving and therefore should take a hit. "The industry should do its share instead of putting the cork on the bottle and saying 'that's it.'"

"I'd like to take any beer executive to any beach or park in San Francisco after the Fourth of July and let him tell me the litter is not part of his industry," Shultz added.

PROP. 134 was born not as an attack on the alcohol industry but from the growing need for treatment and prevention programs that the state has refused to fund. In San Francisco, for example, an estimated 700 drug-addicted mothers need treatment, but fewer than ten places are available in residential treatment programs (see Bay Guardian, 5/9/90).

Prop. 134 would provide more than $7 million in services for addicted mothers and their infants in the Bay Area alone. Statewide, it would add funds to a host of health programs that suffered cutbacks in the state's new budget.

"Health programs would be kicked in the butt without the new tax," Shultz said. Among the programs funded by Prop. 134 are:

- $182.5 million for emergency and trauma services.
- $175.2 million for drug and alcohol treatment and prevention, provided mostly through new treatment services.
- $153.3 million for law enforcement, including efforts to stop drunk drivers, control vandalism in parks and continue the Medi-Vac service that picks up traumatized people on highways.
- $109.5 million for services for the mentally ill, with half of it for seriously disturbed adults and the rest for adolescents and the elderly.
- $109.5 for services to drug and alcohol-affected babies, victims of child abuse, battered women and people suffering physical disabilities.

Opponents attack Prop. 134 for funding non alcohol-related programs, like services for the mentally ill, which they say are only tangentially related to alcohol use. "But alcohol causes a tremendous amount of mental disruption," McGuire said.

Taxpayers for Common Sense spokesperson Sue Thurman also points out that the opposition to Prop. 134 includes the Parent Teacher Student Association, the California Teachers Association and state Superintendent of Schools Bill Honig. By dialing 1-800-464-READ, anyone can receive the group's literature and hear the message that the tax slight public education. However, the group's entire budget comes from the alcohol industry, de Luca acknowledged.

McGuire said Prop. 134 doesn't fund education because for people who abuse drugs or alcohol, treatment is more urgent than education.

"How can you educate a kid that has fetal alcohol syndrome?" McGuire asked rhetorically.

Meanwhile, the alcohol industry is also pouring money into the campaigns of state politicians, Shultz said, noting that if the measure passes in November, the legislature could poke holes in it with a four-fifths majority vote. ■

Carol Ruth Silver launched the group Every Child a Wanted Child to bring RU 486 to California: 'It's an idea whose time has come.'

RU Ready, California?

The manufacturer of RU 486, the revolutionary new abortion pill, says the U.S., with its anti-abortion movement, isn't ready to accept it. An SF-based coalition is trying to change that

By Laura Fraser

EARLY LAST fall, Carol Ruth Silver, a former San Francisco supervisor, was sitting in her office in one of the city's largest real estate firms. She was worrying about selling a $650,000 condo when the phone rang. It was Paul Kangas, a political activist from her past. He wanted her help.

Kangas was a private investigator who, over the many years, had been the Peace and Freedom Party's candidate for everything from the Board of Equalization to the U.S. Senate. He'd never won. Nor had he often sided with Silver in city politics. But one of the things they'd both always supported was a woman's right to abortion, and that was why he was calling.

The year before, Kangas had heard about the new French abortion pill, RU 486. It sounded like a remarkable new drug — women can use it to induce their periods up to seven weeks after getting pregnant. He was interested; during the '60s, he'd helped organize an underground railroad for women needing safe abortions. He had hooked them up with doctors in Los Angeles and arranged for them to make their way to Mexican clinics.

Kangas says he got involved because he comes from a big family, and he remembers clearly the small house his mother had to visit in Butte, Montana, for an illegal abortion when she decided she simply could not have any more children.

This pill, Kangas figured, would not only make things easier for women, but would help the world's overpopulation problem — if it were marketed anywhere outside of France. But, despite clinical experience with some 30,000 French women who found RU 486 to be effective with minimal problems, and the approval of the French government's rigorous drug-regulatory program, there were no plans to make the pill available in the United States.

That's because the owner of the patent, Roussel-Uclaf, and its controlling German company, Hoechst AG (which owns 54 percent of the stock), were reluctant to market RU 486 in the United States: Too many anti-abortionists had threatened to boycott the company's other products if they did. Hoechst has at stake in the United States a quarter of its $23 billion annual sales.

In 1988, under boycott pressure, Roussel-Uclaf even pulled the drug off the market in France. But two days later, the minister of health intervened and ordered it back, declaring it the "moral property of French women."

In California, Kangas began a campaign to get people excited about the drug with his usual strategy: printing up leaflets and passing them out at pro-choice meetings and demonstrations. For the most part, he received a cool response from women who wondered why this strange man in a three-piece suit and beeper was pushing an unknown drug on them; for all they knew, it could be a kind of chemical Dalkon Shield. But after the Supreme Court's Webster decision gave the states the power to limit abortion rights, and RU 486 attracted a little publicity, interest in the drug started picking up.

"You have to do something about it," Kangas insisted to Silver over the phone. "You're a woman, and you're an activist, and you haven't done anything lately."

"Why is it my responsibility?" asked Silver, even as her take-charge instincts started taking over.

"Because I've got you on the phone."

One month later, Carol Ruth Silver stood on the steps of the San Francisco Public Health Department to announce the formation of a new group, Every Child a Wanted Child, with a name carefully chosen to reflect concern not only with abortion, but with the issues of overpopulation and child neglect. The group's goals are to import, test and market RU 486 in California.

That strategy is possible here because of a legal route opened in the battle against AIDS.

AS ONE of the world's foremost experts on AIDS, and the first physician to open a clinic, in 1981, to treat patients with a mysterious "gay cancer," Dr. Marcus Conant has long been concerned about the disease spreading to black and Hispanic youths in inner cities. Many HIV-infected young women, with little access to contraception, will get pregnant, and some will pass their disease along to their fetuses if they don't have abortions. Even if those women could afford to pay for an abortion, Conant knew they might not be able to find a doctor who would perform the blood-spattering procedure on an HIV-positive patient. What the situation called for, he reasoned, was RU 486.

The San Francisco dermatologist, who is now co-chair of the state's AIDS Leadership Committee, decided he'd like to do research on RU 486 in the context of AIDS, offering it as an option to HIV-infected young women who were pregnant. But, as with the AIDS epidemic itself, he knew there would be political stumbling blocks to getting the necessary funding and approval for the new treatment. In both cases, it wasn't the drug that was controversial, it was the patients. With AIDS, he had diagnosed scores of gay young men as doomed before the government had taken any action.

"The main obstacle was not the disease, but the prejudice and negligence of our national leaders," he recalls. "The reason American research is not taking a preeminent role in the world regarding contraception is that there is a terror among politicians that if they take a strong stand, the fundamentalist right will destroy them politically."

But with AIDS, Conant and other physicians had found ways to work around politicians' fears. They learned many lessons from the AIDS epidemic, says Conant, which could be applied to other situations where medicine meets politics. The main one, he says, is "to use science as a tool to move the political system."

Earlier in the AIDS epidemic, Conant did that by setting up a study of how condoms block transmission of the AIDS virus. It wasn't new research; he wouldn't win a Nobel Prize. But by doing the study, he was able to call a press conference, report his scientific observations and force the discussion of condoms in the public debate.

Before Conant's 1985 condom study, newspapers and networks would not discuss condoms in their "family" outlets. After his study, however, condoms became a household word.

Conant also learned how to push the Food and Drug Administration to move faster in approving drugs — by giving it competition. After many fruitless trips to Washington, pleading with FDA officials to put AIDS drugs on a fast track, Conant took an alternative route. He and other doctors worked with state Attorney General John Van de Kamp to develop legislation allowing California to test and market AIDS drugs, independently — over the objections of San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein and many AIDS researchers. The bill passed in September 1987, and by Thanksgiving, Dr. Jonas Salk was testing his AIDS vaccine in human volunteers.

"We've learned with AIDS that if the FDA will not move, there are other ways to do it," said the soft-spoken Conant. "We will do it in California."

AND THEY could do it, he thought, with RU 486. On Oct. 10, 1989, in an address at the National AIDS Update Conference, Conant mentioned in passing that it was absurd that a drug like RU 486, which was available and effective elsewhere, was not allowed inside the United States.

Steve Heilig, an associate of the San Francisco Medical Society who had worked with Conant on many pieces of AIDS legislation, took note. A former staff member of Santa Barbara Planned Parenthood who had written a few medical trade pieces on RU 486, Heilig began to draft a resolution for the California Medical Association to support testing of RU 486 in this state. At the time, he says, he thought it was a "shot in the dark," with maybe a 20 percent chance of passing.

On Oct. 12th, Conant read a news story about the formation of Every Child a Wanted Child, and he called Carol Ruth Silver to offer his help.

Sunday, Oct. 15th was a bright and blustery day in San Francisco, and thousands of women gathered to march in support of abortion rights. The Every Child a Wanted Child contingent was there: Carol Ruth Silver, two friends, Paul Kangas, Kangas's two small children and his 80-year-old mother. They met at a telephone pole at the foot of Market Street, carrying signs and leaflets, and started passing out information on RU 486.

By the time the march started, 25 people had joined them. Their stack of fliers ran out halfway to City Hall, and Silver resorted to scribbling down names and numbers. A computer programmer offered to do their mailing list, and several people made donations. "So many people had heard of RU 486 and were excited about the prospect of it becoming a reality in California," Silver marveled. "We got launched in a big hurry." By the next week, the mailing list numbered 50, and Silver was overwhelmed by calls from the press and interested parties. Her phone, she says, hasn't stopped ringing.

Two weeks later, Silver got wind that Dr. Etienne-Emile Baulieu, the inventor of RU 486, would be in town for a conference of neuroendocrinologists. She tracked him by fax, sending letters to his office in Paris, to his travel assistant and finally to the hotel where he was staying, asking him to meet with her. Finally he called, and she convinced him to come to lunch at Tommy Toy's, an haute cuisine Chinese restaurant.

Silver brought along Kangas and Dr. Bernard Gore, an obstetrician/gynecologist associated with the Oakland Feminist Health Care Clinic. She'd called him earlier to see if he would start a medical committee to study the possibility of testing RU 486. He accepted.

The group sat at a large round table near five-foot porcelain vases and ornate, tapestried walls, and began talking. Baulieu described how the group might get some of the tightly held drug from Roussel-Uclaf. He gave names of people they could seek out in France to get a copy of the research protocol for testing the drug. He also talked of new directions for research on the drug, based on indications that it may help breast tumors, endometriosis, glaucoma and Cushing's disease; it may also ease labor, thereby eliminating the need for many cesarean sections.

At the end of the meal, Silver presented Baulieu with his first honor from a city (he did win one of this country's most prestigious medical honors, the Lasker Award, last year), a commendation by the Board of Supervisors, "with the fond hope that [RU 486] may very soon be available to women throughout the world and particularly in the United States and San Francisco."

THAT HOPE, the physicians in the group soon found out, was overly optimistic. In February, Roussel-Uclaf stopped supplying the drug to the only U.S. clinical-research team ever to test RU 486 as an abortifacient, head-to market 486 in the States," Roussel-Uclaf's international product manager told the Los Angeles Times. "We will resume testing it in the States when the debate and the climate on abortion has been resolved."

Nevertheless, Gore, Conant and Hellig contacted several other physi-

The RU 486 experience

If the San Francisco Medical Study Group succeeds in being able to test RU 486 here, it won't be the first California research team to do so. From 1983 until earlier this year, tests of RU 486 were quietly being done at the University of Southern California Medical Center Women's Hospital in Los Angeles. About 400 women, who heard of the study by word-of-mouth, tried using RU 486 instead of having a surgical abortion.

The studies, which mainly tested RU 486 without the use of prostaglandin — a drug used with RU 486 in France to help expel the uterine contents, resulting in a higher effectiveness rate — found that the drug terminated pregnancies in 90 percent of the women who tried it (the others had surgical abortions).

In terms of women's preferences for the drug over surgical abortion, it was even more of a success. Dr. David Grimes, a professor of obstetrics and gynecology who directed the USC studies, said most of the women in the study had experienced a surgical abortion before, and preferred RU 486 because they didn't have to undergo uncomfortable surgery. "They can avoid the business of having any instruments inside their bodies," Grimes said.

The drug also seems to be easier on the body; the rare complications associated with properly performed surgical abortion — trauma to the uterus or cervix and infection — practically don't exist with RU 486.

Most physicians who have studied RU 486 don't consider it a "miracle cure," though. Grimes says that even if RU 486 were available, many women might still prefer to have surgical abortions, because they are "more definitive, take less time and are more predictable" than RU 486. The pills require several visits and between eight and ten days of bleeding; abortions are over in a matter of minutes.

But Grimes calls RU 486 "an exciting new option for women that could potentially replace a substantial number of suction abortions," noting that surgery will still be needed to terminate later pregnancies. He also says the drug has great potential for saving the lives of the estimated 500,000 women a year who die from complications from botched abortions in countries where it is illegal.

Sarah McKenzie (not her real name) is a Los Angeles entertainment executive who tried RU 486 because she was very apprehensive about having a surgical abortion. "I couldn't deal with going in and laying down and going through an actual abortion," she said. "I didn't want to face the technical part of it, the surgery." Her gynecological nurse practitioner recommended she try RU 486 instead.

Because the study was being kept low-profile to avoid harassment, McKenzie had to use specific words when she called. "You couldn't call the number and say, 'I'm interested in RU 486,' because they'd say, 'I'm sorry, we don't know anything about that.' " Instead she used the code "2K1" to reach the family planning research center and set up an appointment.

She went to the public hospital clinic for her first of five visits. The medical staff tested her blood for pregnancy hormone levels and gave her a complete physical exam (the study, focusing on the drug's effects on normal, healthy people, weeded out those who had liver or kidney problems, anemia, diabetes, Rh-negative blood or were very overweight). McKenzie left, armed with a pile of forms to fill out and literature to read, to think it over.

When she returned the next day to take the RU 486, she says, she wasn't nervous. "I didn't feel the danger or panic I would have felt having an abortion. You're just bringing on your period." She took the three pills, and after being warned that she should take it easy for a few days, she went home.

About a day and a half later, she started to bleed. "It was about twice as bad as a normal period," she recalls. She took three days off work before the weekend, and says she was glad she did. She bled twice as much as usual, and it lasted over a week; she says the third and fourth days were quite heavy, with uncomfortable cramping. She says she also experienced a feeling of depression, which she attributes to a "drop in hormone levels," but says may also have been associated with the emotions surrounding terminating a pregnancy.

McKenzie returned to the clinic twice for follow-up exams (the procedure takes more clinic time than a surgical abortion, and so might be a more inconvenient option for working women). In spite of the discomfort she experienced with the drug, McKenzie says she preferred it over surgery. "I would definitely recommend it, but it's probably not for everybody."

PLUTONIUM SKIES

Despite its recent failures, despite safe, available alternatives, despite growing international protests, NASA insists on launching a new probe carrying 23.7 pounds of toxic plutonium. A Challenger-like disaster could cause thousands of needless deaths

By Karl Grossman

DESPITE THE recent serious National Aeronautics and Space Administration problems — including the flaw in the Hubble space telescope rendering the $1.5 billion device inoperable and the grounding of the space shuttle fleet because of fuel leaks — NASA is pushing ahead with a shuttle mission in October that, if there is an accident, could be a calamitous disaster.

The mission is called Ulysses and is comparable to last year's Galileo mission; it, too, involves a Challenger-type shuttle carrying into space and then launching a probe containing pounds of plutonium. The plutonium would not be used to propel the shuttle but as fuel in a generator that will provide 284 watts of electricity for the probe's instrumentation.

One pound of plutonium, described by scientists as the most toxic substance in the universe, is enough to give a fatal dose of lung cancer to every person on Earth. If there is an accident and the 23.7 pounds of plutonium aboard the Ulysses probe is dispersed back on Earth, widespread death could result.

Opposition to the Ulysses mission is even broader than was resistance to Galileo. The Galileo mission was designed to send a space probe to explore Jupiter, too far from the sun to gather solar energy to generate electricity, NASA insisted. (Although NASA-authorized studies released after last October's Galileo launch contradicted this claim.)

Ulysses is to orbit the sun and is thus obviously well-suited for solar energy. NASA, in its environmental impact statement for Ulysses, acknowledges that a solar-energy system that could be used on the mission will be undergoing "ground demonstration" next year and "flight experiment" in 1993, and will be available for use in the late 1990s.

The Committee to Bridge the Gap, which concerns itself with space/energy issues and supported the Galileo flight, is strongly opposed to a Ulysses plutonium-fueled mission. NASA is using "plutonium power for missions where there are indeed safer alternatives," the Los Angeles-based group headed by Daniel Hirsch, longtime director of the Program on Nuclear Policy at the University of California at Santa Cruz, had protested to NASA.

The opposition to Ulysses has become international in scope because, unlike Galileo, this mission is a joint venture of NASA and the European Space Agency. "We don't want to see nuclear-powered space flights because of the danger of radioactive contamination. It's very simple," says Inge Lendemann, chairperson of the anti-nuclear forum of the Green Party of West Germany. The Greens intend to press the Parliament of West Germany, which is a member of the European Space Agency, not to pursue the Ulysses mission.

Still, NASA's push for Ulysses continues. In the wake of the grounding of the shuttle fleet and amid discussion of the cancellation of several shuttle enough for it to reach Jupiter.

In December, it is to fly 625 miles overhead before being sent back out into space, to return for a second Earth flyby in December 1992. This time, the Galileo probe is to be 185 miles up and flying at more than 30,000 miles an hour, the fastest human-built object ever to buzz the planet.

The parties in the lawsuit — the Christic Institute and the Foundation on Economic Trends, both in Washington, D.C., and the Florida Coalition for Peace and Justice — declare in the new legal papers that if there is an accident during the Ulysses flight and plutonium is released, "many persons will be subjected to a wholly unnecessary risk of contracting cancer."

Further, "in the event that Galileo crashes into the Earth on either of these two flybys, tens of thousands [of people] — and hundreds of thousands if the crash were to occur in a heavily populated major metropolitan area — could be affected... through exposure to plutonium, which could result in their contracting cancer."

Protests, including nonviolent civil disobedience, are also again being planned. The Orlando-based Florida coalition is organizing demonstrations to protest Ulysses, as it did earlier against Galileo. The coalition is setting up what its coordinator, Bruce Gagnon, says will be a "major" demonstration at the Kennedy Space Center on Sept. 22nd — the Ulysses launch on the shuttle Discovery is scheduled for Oct. 5th — and is calling for local demonstrations around the nation and world that day.

The Florida coalition is also engaged in a petition drive calling on NASA, the Department of Energy and Congress to stop the Ulysses mission, and a letter-writing campaign to Congress and newspapers calling for "funding of alternative power sources for space exploration."

'In the event that Galileo crashes into the Earth, thousands of people could be affected through exposure to plutonium which could result in their contracting cancer.'

flights planned for coming months, NASA officials described the Ulysses launch as the agency's "top priority," according to a June 30th report in The New York Times.

Meanwhile, the same groups that brought a lawsuit to try to stop the Galileo mission have amended the litigation to attempt to block the Ulysses launch, and also to have the Galileo mission halted before its probe — containing 49.25 pounds of plutonium — makes two "flybys" of the Earth. Although its destination is Jupiter, the Galileo probe does not have the power to go directly to Jupiter. So NASA has sent it first to circle Venus and then to come back at the Earth — which it is now doing — to use the Earth's gravitational pull to increase its velocity

A VARIETY of accident odds are given for Ulysses in NASA's environmental impact statement for the mission — from 1.8 in 100,000 for a "fire/explosion" at launch, to 1.5 in 100,000 for the shuttle falling back to Earth from orbit. The statement holds that "the probability of release" of plutonium on the flight is "about 1 in 4,200." It admits: "In the unlikely event the [plutonium] modules impact on hard rock, a release is predicted to occur."

If there is a plutonium release, NASA outlines in the statement "decontamination methods" for Florida or any site in the "global commons" that would be hit by the plutonium: "Removal and disposal of all vegetation, removal and disposal of topsoil, relocation of animals. . . . Demolition of some or all structures, permanent relocation of affected population. . . . Destruction of citrus and other perennial growing stocks, banning of future agricultural land uses."

Although NASA insisted prior to the Galileo flight that there was no substitute for plutonium as a power source on the mission, two weeks after the launch, in response to a Freedom of Information request this writer filed with NASA two years before, the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, a prime NASA contractor, released studies declaring that solar energy was a feasible alternative.

One NASA-contracted study, done by eight JPL scientists, concluded: "Based on the current study, it appears that a Galileo Jupiter orbiting mission could be performed with a concentrated photovoltaic solar array power source without changing the mission sequence or impacting science objectives." Another found: "Photovoltaic solar arrays offer a low-cost solution for powering a number of far earth missions."

NASA, having insisted before the studies were obtained that solar power could not be used on the Galileo mission because the space probe would be flying too far from the sun, claimed last year in a letter to Senator Harry Reid

(D-Nevada) that solar power could not be used on the Ulysses flight because it would be flying too close to the sun.

"Ulysses will be using RTG's [plutonium-fueled Radioisotope Thermal Generators] because it will be operating too close to the Sun for solar panels to function properly," wrote Lynn Heninger, NASA assistant ad-

'We're not against the peaceful exploration of space, but we are against the use of nuclear power in space.'

— Bethany Bechtel

ministrator for congressional relations, in a July 14th letter to Reid obtained under the Freedom of Information Act.

However, that was refuted by the official description of the Ulysses' flight path in the Federal Register, which lists major government projects. "During the five-year duration of the mission, the spacecraft will never be closer to the Sun than is the Earth," it stated. An embarrassed Heninger said he was "not an expert in the subject" and blamed NASA "specialists" for giving him the wrong information.

In fact, after passing around Jupiter, to give it the momentum to break out of the ecliptic plane at which the planets circle the sun, the Ulysses probe is to establish a north-south orbit of the sun, much of it averaging the orbit of Mars.

NASA in recent months has been trying to downplay the risks of the Ulysses flight by avoiding mention of the plutonium on it and by insisting it has done all it can to minimize any risk. In a two-page, single-spaced press release issued May 17th detailing the mission and announcing the arrival from Europe of the 814-pound Ulysses "spacecraft that eventually will explore the Sun," NASA did not once mention the word plutonium or note that nuclear power is to be used on the probe. (The European Space Agency is providing the probe; NASA is supplying the plutonium power source and the launch vehicle, the shuttle.)

During a June 27th NASA press conference on Ulysses at Cape Kennedy, William Meeks, the Jet Propulsion Laboratory's manager for the project, said, "We feel we're as safe as we can be. I'm not going to say there are not risks associated with this. But . . . we've done every kind of study."

The Office of Technology Assessment of Congress, meanwhile, has come out with a study of its own that is highly pessimistic about a failure of the shuttle that is to carry the Ulysses probe aloft. "As experience with the space shuttle demonstrates, routinely placing humans in space is especially costly as well as risky," says the report, projecting that "the nation faces a 50-50 chance of losing an additional orbiter [space shuttle] in the next 34 flights (three to four years)."

One state government has taken steps to prevent the launching of any spacecraft carrying nuclear materials from its territory. In Hawaii, where a spaceport has been proposed, legislation prohibiting the launching of any "space vehicles" that "use radioactive materials as a power source" was approved by the state Legislature with only one negative vote and signed into law in June.

Environmental groups are increasingly becoming involved in the issue. As the Sierra Club wrote to NASA, in protesting the Ulysses mission: "We understand that an alternative means of powering the vehicle, using solar power, is available. Obviously, this would be a far preferable option from the environmental and public standpoint." Anne Ehrlich of the organization continued: "However small the probability of occurrence may be, the downside result could include the exposure of . . . a large area of the world to plutonium, with a possibility of entraining tens of thousands of cancers and birth defects."

Opponents stress that their goal is not that NASA forget about surveying the sun from orbit, but that it do so without threatening the lives of people on Earth. "The Sun," noted Hirsch, president of the Committee to Bridge the Gap, to NASA, "has been there a long time, and will be here a long time more."

Says Bethany Bechtel, chair of the Philadelphia-based Citizens to Stop Plutonium in Space: "We're not against the peaceful exploration of space, but we are against the use of nuclear power in space. The Ulysses launch must be stopped."

Karl Grossman, recipient of the George Polk Award for investigative reporting, is a journalism professor at the State University of New York/College at Old Westbury and the author of two books on nuclear technology: Cover Up: What You Are Not Supposed to Know About Nuclear Power and Power Crazy. To get involved in opposing the Ulysses mission, contact the Florida Coalition for Peace and Justice, PO Box 24866, Orlando, FL 32802, (407) 422-3479.

Censored shuttles

KARL GROSSMAN'S continuing struggle to publicize the risks behind sending plutonium into space is almost as important a story as the Galileo and Ulysses missions themselves.

Grossman, a journalism professor at College of Old Westbury, part of the State University of New York system, told the Bay Guardian during an interview last year that he had been researching the hazards of plutonium aboard space flights as early as 1985. Among the materials he had collected, he said, were NASA documents that put the chance of a shuttle disaster at only one in 10,000.

Then, on Jan. 28, 1986, the Challenger exploded, leaving vapor tendrils across the skies of southern Florida — it was only the 25th shuttle mission. While Challenger's payload did not include plutonium, the next shuttle flight was scheduled to carry aloft the Galileo probe, containing 49.25 pounds of the radioactive material, widely considered the most deadly substance known. During the history of U.S. space flight, Grossman's thorough research revealed, three of 22 plutonium-carrying missions had ended in disaster.

The Nation ran Grossman's article about the proposed Galileo mission and its potential for disaster, but the story received so little attention elsewhere it was selected by a panel of nationally known media professionals as one of Project Censored's ten most important, most underreported stories of 1986. Despite the recognition by Project Censored, a national media-criticism project directed by Sonoma State University Communications Professor Carl Jensen, a 1987 The Nation report that the Galileo was going ahead as planned was again selected by Project Censored the next year.

But gradually the story has received increasing attention. The Los Angeles Times reported on it in 1987, the San Francisco Examiner in 1988 and the Bay Guardian repeatedly since 1987 (see, for example, "NASA's deadly gamble," Bay Guardian, 10/11/89). But by 1988, the rapidly approaching Galileo launch had moved into the number-three slot on the Project Censored list.

When Dennis Bernstein was commissioned by Newsday in 1988 to write an article about how the mainstream news media censor the news, he chose the Galileo story as his test case. Some editors and producers denied that the story even existed. "I don't believe [Galileo] exists," said NBC News President Reuven Frank. "If there was a plan to do that, it would be reported."

Newsday never ran the story — Bernstein says it was censored, while Newsday said Bernstein's reporting relied too much on confidential sources — but it did appear in Extra!, the newsletter of New York-based Fairness and Accuracy in Reporting, which shared Project Censored recognition with an article by Grossman in The Long Island Monthly.

In 1989, for the first time in years, Galileo was not among Project Censored's top ten. Although the story has still not been disseminated widely by the mainstream press, Grossman has been working more with the alternative press — including Alternet, the news service for member papers of the Association of Alternative Newsweeklies — to help get the word out. The accompanying story is one such Alternet article.

cians to discuss trying to test RU 486 — with the idea that by bringing it here, studying it and telling people how it works, they could improve the climate for the drug. "The reality is, it's been tested enough," says Gore. "There are some political hurdles we have to jump, but if we let the public know about RU 486, maybe the public will rise up."

Most doctors they contacted were interested, but some called back later to refuse because their colleagues deemed it "too controversial." Other prominent physicians — Dr. Carl Levinson, chief of obstetrics and gynecology at Children's Hospital; Dr. Michael Policar, medical director of San Francisco/Alameda Planned Parenthood, and Dr. Judith Mates, a private practitioner — agreed to join, expecting that the study would remain quiet until it was completed.

Working with Baulieu, the physicians received the research protocol from the World Health Organization, studied the dosage, the timing, the best subjects, the contraindications, and began sketching out a new study. Their idea was simple: to compare the physical and psychological differences between 100 women who'd had a surgical abortion and 100 who'd been given RU 486. Then they'd write up, and announce, their results.

They knew they might have problems obtaining FDA approval and getting the drug for the tests. Even if they could complete the study, it might take years to get a company to work out potential liability problems and manufacture the controversial drug. But despite skepticism by others in the national family-planning community, the RU 486 Medical Study Group planned to submit a detailed protocol for approval from the state Food and Drug Board and from university human-subjects boards, as they would to test a new drug for any other legal medical procedure.

In the first week of March, the prestigious New England Journal of Medicine came out with a large-scale study of the French experience with RU 486. The drug worked for 96 percent of the 2,115 women tested. The research team concluded that the drug, accompanied two days after ingestion by a small dose of a hormone called progesterone, "is an effective and safe method for the early termination of pregnancy."

On March 7th, Dr. Judith Mates spoke to the California Medical Association, asking it to support a resolution, drafted by Steve Heilig, calling for efforts to investigate the use of RU 486 in California, and to ask the American Medical Association to support its testing in the rest of the country. "I thought there was going to be a lot of controversy," she says. But after she read the resolution, no one argued against it, and the vote was unanimous except for one or two mumbled nays.

"I realized that this is more of a political than a medical controversy," says Mates. "What we're talking about is a drug that's going to improve our treatment of patients. How can anybody argue against that?"

These medical announcements were monitored closely by politicians. That week, Van de Kamp called Conant and discussed how RU 486 would fit into the independent drug-testing law they had established for AIDS drugs. On March 14th, the then-gubernatorial candidate, with Conant at his side, held a press conference.

"I believe American women should have the right to choose," the attorney general began. "If further testing confirms that RU 486 is safe and effective, American women should have access to it on the same terms as women of Western Europe. . . . California has the power to lead the way."

Two weeks later, in San Francisco, Supervisor Terence Hallinan introduced a resolution calling on Governor George Deukmejian and the state Legislature to allocate funds to allow RU 486 testing to proceed. The hearing room was packed with RU 486 supporters. Supervisor Richard Hongisto, calling the meeting a "mindless game," questioned why the board was passing resolutions concerning processes it couldn't affect, as it is wont to do.

Van de Kamp told the board he had contacted Roussel-Uclaf to see if it would consider bypassing the FDA to allow testing in California. "The answer came back; it was guarded," he reported. "Yes, they would consider it."

Women representing several pro-choice groups stepped up to the mike in favor of RU 486. Then Jim Robinson, a retired Navy chaplain, came forward, describing himself as "a representative of Jesus Christ in this world." In his speech, he unleashed the anti-abortion fury that RU 486 manufacturers are worried about. "What you're doing is murder," he yelled hoarsely. "We can't keep killing people."

Supervisor Angela Alioto reminded him that abortion is legal, then asked, "You have a teen. She gets into the unfortunate situation of being pregnant. Since she's going to make up her mind, would you rather have her surgically worked on than take two pills?" After a back-and-forth, Robinson replied, "I don't believe it makes any difference whether she kills the baby or kills herself."

Alioto threw up her hands. "Dear Jesus, I think that's the problem."

That's the clip that made it to the ABC Evening News' American Agenda. "San Francisco: America's first battleground over RU 486."

SO FAR, Every Child a Wanted Child and the independent medical group studying RU 486 have received only a few threatening calls. "Don't get involved in killing babies, or you'll regret it," said a voice on Heilig's phone. Gore got similar calls, but the number of women phoning his office wanting to use the drug right now far outnumbered the crank calls.

Jan Carroll, legislative director of the California Pro-Life Council in Sacramento, said, "We oppose abortion, and RU 486 is an abortion pill. We'll do whatever we have to do to try to keep RU 486 off the market in the United States."

Carroll compared the drug to Thalidomide, the Dalkon Shield and DES. "We're opposed to using women

'Initially, I thought bringing RU 486 here was pie-in-the-sky. But I've been astounded at the degree of political support.'

— Dr. Michael Policar

as guinea pigs," she says. Then she turned her focus to the fetus. "We're concerned about women taking the pill and delivering the child in the toilet." That image, she believes, could have lasting psychological effects on a woman. "If she's able to peel back the tissue surrounding the child, she'll see she's just participated directly in taking that child's life."

One authority willing to respond to these concerns is Dr. Michael Policar of San Francisco/Alameda Planned Parenthood. He considered the scientific parts first, tapping his fingers against each other. With regard to the long-term effects, he said the drug seems to be in and out of the body in two days; based on its use by 30,000 women in France, no one has come up with any evidence to the contrary: "It's clear in the short term it does not have a negative impact on a woman's health or future fertility."

Another area of potential concern is whether the drug might harm fetuses that fail to abort. "[There are] only a few reported cases of women who have had a failure of RU 486 and gone to term. All the babies who have been exposed to it and gone to term and been born have been normal," said Policar, "but that experience is so limited, we really can't say." Policar emphasized that more testing should be done on the drug in the United States; that's what he's interested in doing as part of the independent RU 486 Medical Study Group.

In response to Carroll's description of delivering "the child" in the toilet, Policar said, "We're talking about an embryo which might have 48 or 64 cells at the time it implants in the endometrial cavity." Through a microscope, that looks about like a tadpole. RU 486 works only up to six or seven weeks, by preventing the hormone progesterone from reaching the uterine lining and giving it signals to grow; without it, the lining and embryo are sloughed off like menstrual discharge.

"At six weeks, you'd have a very difficult time seeing it with the naked eye," said Policar. For women using RU 486, he said, the abortion is simply like having a heavy period. It may last a few days longer than usual, and it may cause some cramping.

After the San Francisco Board of Supervisors unanimously passed a resolution in favor of testing RU 486, Every Child a Wanted Child announced the physicians' study plans to the press. Annoyed, the doctors' group took pains to distance itself from the organization, which has said it may eventually go so far as to form a company to market the drug.

In spite of the friction, the political momentum continued apace. In April, Representative Barbara Boxer wrote a letter to George Bush that was also signed by 13 fellow California Democrats, urging him to support federal research and testing of RU 486 and asking the administration not to obstruct clinical trials of the drug performed by California scientists and doctors. On May 11th, the California Medical Association voted to write to Roussel-Uclaf and the FDA, urging them to make the drug available to Californians.

On May 16th, the doctors' study group submitted its protocol to the human-subjects boards of hospitals where it plans to conduct its tests, and to the California Food and Drug Bureau for approval. Once testing is approved, all that remains is to get the drug itself from Roussel-Uclaf. When and if that's possible is anybody's guess. "Roussel has been circumspect in telling us what we need to do to go about getting the drug, without telling us whether or not they'll give it to us," says Dr. Bernard Gore.

In May, Roussel-Uclaf first decided not to distribute RU 486 in England and Scandinavia, which had approved the drug for clinical use; then it reversed itself and said it would sell the drug in those countries. Policar says he is hopeful that the effort to bring the pill here will succeed, too. "Initially, I thought it was pie-in-the-sky," he said. "But I've been astounded at the degree of political support."

He said he's reluctant to talk about rumors, but he's heard that word of San Francisco's political efforts has gotten back to France and the World Health Organization, and they've reciprocated with discreet inquiries. "That ice jam is starting to break up," said Policar. "Once we get the drug, the rest will fall in place easily."

If the drug doesn't become available, there may be other ways to get it here eventually. Kangas, who was a biologist before he got involved in politics, says it wouldn't be so hard to reverse-engineer such a drug. "You can analyze a pill by using different tests on it. It's not unknown what's in it; it's a steroid."

Conant agrees. "If the company will not release the drug, the challenge becomes to develop a drug that is similar, but not identical," he says. "Any doctor can figure that out."

But it's also likely that with a market of 1.6 million women having abortions each year in the United States — half of them done within the RU 486 timetable — Roussel-Uclaf might not want to miss the opportunity to distribute the drug itself.

As someone with 11 years of experience judging public opinion as a city supervisor, Carol Ruth Silver looks back at her six months of organizing to build support for RU 486 and claims real public support. When she considers how so many disparate people at once came up with the idea to import the drug to California, she sees it as no coincidence. "If we hadn't done this, someone else would have," she says. "It's an idea whose time has come."

GETTING THROUGH THE PERMIT MAZE

Small businesses in San Francisco face a confusing tangle of permit regulations. Here are some tips to make opening shop a little quicker and easier

By Heather Mackey

PART OF San Francisco's charm is that it isn't a city of fake stucco malls and chain stores — it's still a city where people band together to fight chain giants like Thrifty Jr. and preserve the integrity of their neighborhoods. Its character lies in the fact that small businesses are still vital contributors to the city and its economy. But it hasn't always been an easy place to set up shop. Despite two new agencies designed to help small businesses, getting a permit to operate a business is still a daunting process.

At the most basic level, the permit process in San Francisco can present the small business owner with a frightening phalanx of obstacles. Even the city officials who were interviewed for this article, when asked to give an overview of the permit process in lay terms, responded almost universally with loud laughter and a hearty "Good Luck!"

Some of the difficulties facing small business owners are due to the fact that permit requirements are constantly changing to suit the latest dictates of federal, state, county and city directives. Everything from rulings on disabled access to environmental reviews to re-zoning can have an effect on the type of permits a business will need and how difficult they will be to obtain. Backlogs, considering the volume of permit requests the city handles, are a fact of life.

Another reason that even city officials describe the permit process as "a morass" is that until recently, there were no city agencies with the specific purpose of helping small businesspeople. The Small Business Advisory Commission, which was specifically created to promote small business, was established by the Board of Supervisors in 1985, however the city was not able to staff and fund it until barely a year ago.

The good news is that, with a little advance planning, the permit process is not all that difficult to negotiate — if you know what to prepare for and what common pitfalls to avoid. (See the Superlist, page 38, for a guide to organizations that help small businesses get started.)

One invaluable resource to anyone interested in starting up a small business is the Mayor's Office of Business and Economic Development's (MOBED) Getting Business Started, a free booklet that contains a step-by-step guide to city, state and federal requirements along with a map of the different offices, hours and telephone numbers along with a resource list of local agencies.

While you're picking up a copy of Getting Business Started at MOBED, check out the "One-Stop Shop," another recently formed organization that is trying to make it easier to set up business in San Francisco. Conceived as a central location where businesspeople can go to have their questions answered, the office's other purpose is to help mediate between different departments, each of which may have their own "quirky" way of doing things. According to Deputy Mayor James Ho, part of the One-Stop Shop's reason for being is so that "small business doesn't fall through the cracks."

ONE OF the first steps to starting a small business is drawing up a detailed business plan that includes a description of the services or product, financial projections, an evaluation of the marketplace and a time line for permits with a prospective starting date. The best way to negotiate the sometimes intimidating permit process is to know early on exactly what licenses and permits you will require, and exactly which agencies you will need to contact.

Once you have a realistic idea of the type of business and the costs involved, you can start on the licensing and permit process. With a few exceptions, the first three steps are virtually the same for anyone starting a business.

Everyone has to register their fictitious business name with the county clerk (City Hall, room 317). The only exception is if you are using just your name — with no other words attached — as the name of the business. Within 30 days of registering, you must run the legal notice in a general circulation newspaper for four weeks.

Small business operators must also register in the city's Tax Collector's Office (City Hall, room 107) to receive a business license. The fee of $75 may be waived if you anticipate making less than $15,000 a year.

Businesses that involve the exchange of physical goods or the collection of sales tax — retail or wholesale operations, for example — need to have a seller's permit or resale license from the State Board of Equalization. There is no application fee, however the board may require a deposit against future sales tax you may owe and you must submit a detailed business plan with the proposed location, projected start date and a personal financial statement.

For some people, the formal process (besides getting square with the IRS, of course) stops here. Carole Theno, who runs her own desktop publishing company, moved to San Francisco three years ago. As far as licenses and permits, she estimates that the entire process took only a couple of weeks and cost less than $300. "Whatever you're doing physically with the equipment and the space is going to be the most labor-intensive part of start-up. I didn't find the paperwork all that cumbersome."

Patrick Young is a graphic designer who specializes in "environmental signage," a field that includes everything from the signs telling you which way to your gate in an airport terminal to signs that reveal whether a restroom is handicapped accessible. Young works out of his SOMA office space, and since his use of it didn't involve many changes, he had no problems with the zoning of the area. He's also kept the paperwork relatively uncomplicated by using freelancers. "I just have designers come through and freelance for me, that way I don't have to deal with workers' comp."

For Young, it took "maybe a week total" to take care of the paperwork and get his business operating. However, he already had 11 years of freelance and environmental graphics experience behind him. The difference now is that he makes his own hours and doesn't have to answer to anyone else. "It's probably the best move I've ever made for myself... I've finally been able to travel."

NOT ALL small businesses are as easy to start up as desk-top publishing or design. Even if the type of business doesn't involve the use of a building or location that requires extensive inspections or public hearings on zoning, there are numerous permits that individual city departments — like fire, police or health — must dispense before a business can open.

Anyone starting a business that involves food, for example, must apply to the SF Health Department (101 Grove) before any renovation or construction begins. An application,

Superlist No. 498: Organizations offering counseling for starting a small business

That creative spark hits you and you can't stop envisioning yourself greeting customers, clients or patrons at the door of your tastefully decorated store, office or restaurant. Maybe you're tired of working for someone else; perhaps you finally have enough money saved for a down payment on a loan; maybe you have the perfect product — ice skates on wheels or electronic bolo ties. Hell, why wouldn't people be lined up at your doorstep, eagerly awaiting the premiere of your erotic and intelligent lesbian videos? Or, being a transplanted New Yorker, perhaps you sense the overwhelming need for a Kosher deli in the Haight, complete with challah bread, matzoh ball soup and knishes.

After deciding to go ahead and start your own business, you realize that you don't know quite how to get started. After all, it looks much more complicated than just selling earrings on Telegraph Avenue. What is worker's compensation insurance? Isn't patent a kind of leather?

There's a lot of paperwork and bureaucracy involved, so help may be needed to get through it all. For those with touch-tone phones, a couple of 24-hour recorded information lines are available: The Small Business Administration (744-6823) offers information about that group's services; the Sacramento-based California Small Business Advocate's HELP line (916-327-HELP, or 916-445-8313 for rotary phones) offers 60 recorded messages on licenses and permits, location considerations, fictitious names, payroll taxes, occupational health and safety and other topics. For more personal and detailed assistance, however, counseling services may be the way to go, so we've compiled a list of local organizations that may just help get you started.

San Francisco

The One-Stop Shop Although it's only been operating for the last eight months, this division of the Mayor's Office of Business and Economic Development is one of the most helpful resources in the city. With information on permits, licensing, financing and more, the One-Stop Shop is designed to be the one place where businesspeople can go for help through the maze of city departments and requirements. 100 Larkin, 554-8930

San Francisco Chamber of Commerce Offers a small business start-up kit for $26.81, which includes government forms, instructions, a calendar and mailing labels. Also sponsors Vendor Fairs, opportunities for small businesses to present their products and services to large corporations, particularly those with minority- and women-owned business requirements. They also plan programs, workshops and seminars on development and marketing for existing businesses. Past workshops include "How to do your own PR," "Success Through Service" and low-cost marketing tips in "Guerrilla Marketing." Future seminars include "Capitalize on Diversity," which deals with the increased productivity of a diverse workforce, and "Marketing Professional Services," which concerns building a professional image without advertising. Also holds monthly roundtable discussions. Membership fees vary with the size of the organization. 465 California, 94104, 392-4520, ext. 842.

San Francisco/Oakland Minority Business Development Center Provides advice on general management and marketing, as well as on preparing business plans and loan packages. Funded by the Minority Development Agency. Offers free Wednesday orientations for the development center's services, which are for domestic businesses that are at least 51 percent owned, operated and controlled by ethnic minorities. Also sets up individual consultations about starting a business and other business concerns; fees vary. One California, 21st floor, 94111, 989-2920.

Yet it offers the ultimate in comfort.

The Bio-Firm Mattress helps you save money, space, your back, and the environment. Its low price is the result of intelligent construction. So you get twice as much mattress value as a Serta, Sealy, or Simmons. And you sleep with the healthy support that your back deserves.

There's a firmness to fit every body and an automatic safeguard against that old nemesis: mattress sag. There's a built-in bedboard, eliminating the need for a bulky boxspring. And there's even a 30-night comfort trial. Do a favor for your budget and your body. Discover Bio-Firm!

OWN A BIO-FIRM MATTRESS FOR THESE TWENTY REASONS:

- Bio-Firm has eliminated sagging without sacrificing support
- The zipper allows you to adjust the firmness
- Each Bio-Firm component is covered by its own warranty.
- Special cushioning eliminates the need for a box foundation.
- High-tech design enables Bio-Firm to be one-sided, not two.
- You get ideal support with a choice of 20 firmnesses.
- Gain comfort from the world's most advanced cushioning.
- Bio-Firm mattresses provide maximum REM and delta sleep
- All Bio-Firm components are hypo-allergenic
- All Bio-Firm components are environmentally sound.
- The Bio-Firm 2000 comforts you with 2,000 comfort coils
- The Bio-Firm +000 supports you with 4,000 comfort coils.
- Bio-Firm has offered 30-Night Comfort Trials since 1979.
- The most expensive tempered steel springs are in Bio-Firm
- You can actually see how Bio-Firm supports your body.

- Bio-Firm is available with Dupont's Qualofil cushioning.
- Bio-Firm permits space-saving underbed drawers.
- Choose Bio-Firm's high-tech foam or 660-coil springs.
- Bio-engineering offers two-way support to sleeping partners.
- Confirmed backsleepers and tummy sleepers love Bio-Firm.

Every Bio-Firm Sleep System is backed by a FREE 30-Night Comfort Trial—your assurance of total satisfaction.

San Francisco Renaissance Entrepreneurship Center In addition to offering courses in planning your own business, San Francisco Renaissance offers counseling, networking meetings, a lecture series and a "micro-business incubator" for start-up businesses. The next 14-week course cycle begins Sept. 18th. 1453 Mission, 863-5337.

Service Corps of Retired Executives (SCORE) Retired business executives volunteer to counsel fledgling small-business owners. They also give seminars on planning, management, marketing and advertising. Call to arrange a counseling appointment. Mon.-Fri., 10 am-noon. 211 Main, fourth floor, 94105, 744-6827.

Small Business Administration Provides a start-up kit containing information on federal, state and local licensing requirements, where to get the licensing forms, advice on selecting the professional services of a lawyer, accountant or banker, information on free or low-cost counseling, training and pre-business workshops, a list of SBA publications and a checklist covering the many details involved in starting a small business. Financial assistance and management counseling are available, as well as business loans made by private lenders and guaranteed by SBA. Offers various courses and conferences. SBA is also scheduled to launch Women's Network for Entrepreneurial Training (WNET) this fall, which will match established women business owners with new entrepreneurs for a one-year training period. Protegees should have been in business for at least one year, and show gross receipts of at least $50,000. Call 744-6771 for further information. 211 Main, fourth floor, 94105, 744-6820, ext. 126.

Small Business Advisory Commission In addition to providing seminars and workshops for local businesspeople, the SBAC works to promote small business in San Francisco by providing business expansion loans, information on permits and city requirements, and tries to mediate between small business and local government. 100 Larkin, SF 554-8930.

Women's Initiative in Self-Employment Exists to assist low- and moderate-income women of diverse ethnic and social backgrounds in becoming economically self-sufficient through entrepreneurial activity. Services include individual counseling and an introductory seminar, "Start Smart," designed to help women assess business ideas and plans. Also offers a series of workshops on marketing, finance, sales and planning led by experts in their fields. Fees on sliding scale. Has a small loan fund for qualified clients. 201 Mission, suite 600, 94105, 624-3351.

East Bay

The Business Resource Center Offers advice on the legal, financial and marketing concerns of those starting small businesses, and makes referrals to other government agencies. A pre-business seminar sponsored by Contra Costa County government takes place the fourth Wednesday of every month. Volunteers counsel entrepreneurs on advertising, management, financial documentation and taxation. Seminar, $15; other services free. 2425 Bisso, suite 270, Concord 94520, 646-5377.

East Bay Small Business Development Center Gives seminars throughout the year funded by the Department of Commerce. Has informational packet available that deals with loan packaging, planning, financial management, sources of financing and financial analysis. Offers advice on how to formulate a business plan. Also offers classes at Vista College. Mon.-Fri., 9 am-5 pm. 2201 Broadway, suite 814, Oakl. 94612, 893-4114, (8/15/90) which costs $159, must be made to Environmental Health with detailed blueprints of the proposed space. A health inspector will visit the site during construction and return when the building is finished to walk through it one more time with the owner; thereafter, the health department arranges for quarterly, unannounced inspections. The process, and the fee, is the same for a transfer of ownership, since the permits themselves aren't transferable.

For someone who wants to open a small catering company, or sell a limited amount of a particular item, it is probably not a good idea to try to do the cooking out of your own kitchen. State health codes contain very specific strictures about everything from the temperature of the dishwasher being used to the distance that bathrooms must be from the food preparation area. A less costly option than getting your own kitchen up to standard is leasing time in a kitchen that is already "certified." Some kitchens are in the business of renting out space, and some restaurants will lease space during their off-hours. According to Ben Gale, head of the Environmental Health Department, "Entering into an agreement with an already-permitted facility is the best way to do it, particularly when you're operating on a shoestring." The $159 fee still applies, but you avoid both a lengthy inspection process and construction costs.

For Annie Collins, a nurse with a killer recipe for barbecue sauce, certifying her own kitchen would have been too expensive. While she was taking night classes in business at San Francisco Renaissance, she heard about Eclectic Cookery, a large kitchen in the Hunters Point shipyard that rents out to caterers. She began to work on the business in March of this year. After filing with the Health Department, she was able to start selling her D-Lish Special BBQ Sauce this June in neighborhood markets and health food stores.

IT'S IRONIC that one of the longest waits for permits comes in an area of business that has nothing to do with time-consuming inspections like health requirements. The waiting list for an Artists in Public Places permit, the permit you need to sell your crafts or jewelry on the street, is about one year. The Artists in Public Places program is administered by the SF Arts Commission (25 Van Ness), which determines what parts of the city are open to street artists and juries the work to make sure that people aren't just reselling goods that they have bought wholesale. Upon receiving the permit, however, street artists can make as much as $100 a day — depending on the location — and sometimes nearly five times that much during the holiday season.

Enrique Mendoza, a street artist who sells the jewelry and scarves he makes in his studio in the Castro, is an enthusiastic participant in the program and part of the Artists in Public Places artists committee, which lobbies the Arts Commission to open up new neighborhoods and provide more spaces. After receiving his business license from the city and his seller's permit from State Board of Equalization, he waited more than two years to get his APP permit.

For Mendoza, the wait was worth it. "It certainly makes living in the city a lot more vivacious," he said, "and it's a lot better than going to an office every day." Being a street artist, however, can be fairly short on job security. Because certain areas of the city have such high foot traffic, Fisherman's Wharf, for instance, the Arts Commission conducts a lottery to see who can sell in certain places. During the holiday season, more spaces are open, but Mendoza would like to see more neighborhoods opened up during the year. "We think that Artists in Public Places really enhances the neighborhood. People in Noe Valley or the Castro [where it is currently illegal to sell goods on the street] do support the street artists and do like hand-made items. We want it to be legal, though — I mean, we pay taxes."

Ermanno DiFebo, an events promoter, is in the business of putting on parties. With his partners, he's involved in events like the monthly Glas Haus and Do Not Sit on the Furniture floating parties and the new weekly club, Naked Angel at the Endup. Because he stages his events in places like the Western Furniture Mart, he doesn't have to worry about building permits and zoning requirements. He does, however, have to apply to the Fire Department for a public assemblage permit and to the Police Department for a place of entertainment permit each time he wants to throw a party. He also applies to the police for a cabaret license each time he plans on an event continuing past 2 a.m.

Even though it means going through a three-week permit process with a public hearing, it's worth it to DiFebo

SAY GOODBYE TO EMBARRASSING PERSPIRATION STAINS FOREVER...

With the Soft Little Lace Camisole That Keeps Blouses Dry.

You know how it is. You've got a big meeting, and you're wearing your best silk blouse. You're also a bit nervous. As the pressure rises, you start to sweat. Nothing gives you away like perspiration stains on a silk blouse.

Now slip on a Lacey Original. A soft lace camisole that stops perspiration before it hits your blouse. You can feel fresh, look confident, all day long. No one ever has to know you're feeling nervous.

Protect expensive clothes.

How many silk blouses have you ruined with unsightly perspiration stains? By slipping on a Lacey, not only will you protect your fine clothes from damaging sweat stains - you'll also cut your dry cleaning bills. Instead of a cleaning every time you wear a blouse, perhaps you'll clean it every four or five wearings. Those savings can add up fast.

So comfortable, you'll forget you're wearing a Lacey.

Your Lacey doesn't look like the tough worker it is. It looks and feels like any lace camisole, made of the finest stretch lace for a perfect fit. The cotton shields are extra-thin, so you'll forget they're there to obtain a cabaret license. "Sometimes a cabaret license can really help with security. It's a proven accident-making moment every time you have to move a large crowd away at one time instead of letting it die naturally — and I've never seen a party die naturally at 2 am, especially on the weekends."

The Police Department dispenses permits for everything from video game parlors to massage parlors, from secondhand stores to taxicabs — mostly because it's checking for possible vice-related activity. In the case of most nightclubs, however, the permit officer tries to assess the impact of the noise and traffic on the neighborhood. Each district station has a permit officer who investigates the applicant, the character of the proposed business and the noise impact it will have on its surroundings.

The Police Department is one of the last places on the list for a business owner. According to Sergeant Stephen Tacchini, who heads the permit division, the Police Department "acts as kind of a clearing house. We cannot issue a permit until all the other departments are in agreement." An application—which must detail the days and times the business is to be open, the equipment, the number of staff members, the number of clients expected and whether the business will be serving alcohol — must be made to the Police Department before the owner begins operation. The process usually takes about a month. Fees range from around $250 for a secondhand dealer to about $550 for a dance hall. All of the permits it issues are subject to public hearing.

LIKE MOST of the permit experts interviewed for this article, Tacchini's advice to the prospective owner of a small business had to do with problems in a building's physical structure and zoning. "One of the biggest pitfalls," he said, "is that people don't look into the zoning of an area. You can modify a building but you can't change the zoning."

The zoning counter at the City Planning Department is the place to go to find out what kind of business is permissible at any given location. Usually, you can receive same-day information on the status of a location if you come with specific details about the surrounding addresses and block numbers and a description of the type of business that you want to run. Considerations such as a liquor license, off-street parking or an increase in foot traffic can also affect whether the Planning Department will approve your business or whether it will require a public hearing.

Ray Daniel, the owner of a small Mission District cheese store called Daniel Creamery, said he "didn't know about the new laws," when he tried to move his business two blocks away into a larger building. Daniel said that when he asked the Planning Department, "They said it would be fine, then I found out that if you're bigger than 1,000 square feet for that part of town, you're classified as a fast-food business — and that means a public hearing."

The zoning counter at the Planning Department is the place to go to find out what kind of business is permissible at any given location. Usually, you can receive same-day information on the status of a location. . .

David Heindel, a real estate specialist at MOBED, advised anyone who's entering a new space or remodeling to seriously consider engaging an architect or engineer who's familiar with the permit requirements in San Francisco: "Anytime you do anything with a building, you could change its status vis-a-vis the Building and Fire Codes. If you have a professional architect or engineer who's architect or engineer who's familiar with the rules in San Francisco, and they sign the plan, it can speed the process at the Bureau of Building Inspection. It could be the best $1,000 you ever spend."

According to Heindel, making sure your location is square with the Planning Department can be the "number-one hurdle" facing a small businessperson. "What you want to do may or may not be allowed," he said. "For instance, there's a moratorium on new banks in Chinatown and new fast-food restaurants in parts of North Beach. You need to go in [to Planning] with as much information as you have — take photos of the place with you."

Unexpected problems with the building, whether they have to do with zoning, seismic safety, parking or handicapped access, can cause significant delays in the permit process — a situation that can quickly become disabling if you're already paying rent on the space. "Don't sign a lease and agree to pay money until you know that you're going to be able to open," Heindel counseled. "You either have to eat that rent money or you have to convince your landlord that you can't pay until you start operating."

That may be easier to say than to do, especially if there is a lot of competition for the space. Doing some research, however, before you sign the lease can usually prevent the majority of nasty surprises. In the case of Rick Mayerson, one of three partners who just opened the new South Beach Billiards pool hall and cafe, he was able to eliminate most of his concerns about the location before signing a lease.

"I was looking for a location that would enable me to go through the process in the most expedient way," Mayerson said. The space, an old SOMA warehouse, needed to be converted from industrial use, but since the zoning allowed a billiards hall, Mayerson didn't need hearings with the Planning Department. But even though Mayerson wasn't changing the building structurally, the change in use required a seismic review. "The first thing was to have an engineer look it over to see if there were seismic problems," he said. "If there had been, we would have passed on the building." For Mayerson, the $3,000 it cost for an engineer to tell him if the building would need seismic improvements was well worth it, since the construction involved in a seismic upgrade can easily cost tens of thousands of dollars.

Mayerson avoided another potential pitfall by contacting the neighbors to explain what kind of business he was planning. Both the billiards license that he obtained from the Police Department was well worth it, since the con-(from the Department of Alcohol Beverage Control) were subject to public hearings. To avoid a lengthy public appeals process, Mayerson simply introduced himself to the surrounding property owners. "A lot of people have very negative stereotypes about what a pool hall is. I wanted to explain to them that it was an upscale billiards parlor."

All of it, from the Health Department permit to serve food to the Planning Department approval of the off-street parking, went off without a hitch until the Planning Department notified him last December that he needed to provide an environmental review study on traffic in the area. After three months, Mayerson was finally able to submit a study "that only proved what everyone already knew. [That] at 5:25 pm I could lie down in the middle of Brannan and not get hit." The quake and the environmental review added a full four months to the permit process, doubling the amount of time that Mayerson and his partners had budgeted for it.

His advice to new business owners? "Have enough money, be prepared for setbacks and don't make it harder on yourself by falling in love with a building that has a lot of problems." ■

Taking risks to attract a younger audience: Carole Shorenstein Hays is mounting a series of offbeat plays at the Marines Memorial at the Marines Memorial Theater.

BEYOND BROADWAY

Theater mogul Carole Shorenstein Hays is best known for bringing Broadway hits to the Bay Area. Now she's scaling down with a series of offbeat theater works she hopes will appeal to younger, hipper audiences

By Misha Berson

SHE ONCE described herself as "a Howard Hughes-type" with a "handful of friends and a very large Rolodex." But these days Carole Shorenstein Hays has been much in the public eye — more so than at any other time in her 13 years as a San Francisco theater mogul. Why is she talking to just about any local publication that asks? She's on the stump for "Carole Shorenstein Hays Presents," a series at the Marines Memorial Theatre that's her most adventurous (and risky) venture in years.

By noncommercial theater standards this cluster of shows may not seem like much of a gamble. Bill Cain's Slapstick Tragedy (playing Aug. 11th-Sept. 16th) is an interracial, rap music youth drama, a Mark Taper Forum and Hartford Stage Company hit on its way to Broadway. The Lisbon Traviata (Sept. 25th-Nov. 4th), Terry McNally's sardonic drama about two gay opera buffs, received a warm reception in New York — as did Julie Taymor's wondrous puppet folktale, Juan Darien (due later in November). The December entry, the Buddy Holly musical Buddy, also has Broadway aspirations and some built-in commercial appeal.

But for Shorenstein Hays, this series is clearly a big leap. Since 1977, when her real estate mogul father Walter Shorenstein gave her the keys to the Curran Theatre, she has played it safe, sticking mostly to whatever came down the commercial pike from New York. Since taking over the cavernous Golden Gate Theatre in 1979, and the sizeable Orpheum Theatre in 1981, she has run a successful "Best of Broadway" series each year in partnership with New York producer James Nederlander. Overall, she's supplied San Francisco audiences with blockbuster musicals (Cats, Dreamgirls, Les Miserables), some fine drama (Glen Garry Glen Ross) and a mixed bag of tired retreads (A Dismal King and I).

What she hasn't done is pull together many creative projects of her own, despite the enormous resources at her command. Her 1987 production of August Wilson's Fences flourished on Broadway, but Shorenstein Hays quickly pulled back from the New York milieu. And she's never shown any sustained interest in Bay Area drama, apart from her brief tenure as a board member of the Magic Theatre.

Now, flush from the long-running tenancy of Les Miz at the Curran, and clearly eager for new personal challenges, Shorenstein Hays is making some moves. In January she hired Marion Lever, an SF Opera administrator, to help develop new projects. Their first collaboration is putting together the Marines Memorial series — shows we might not otherwise have seen. Will more inviting packages follow? Will the producer's interest in younger, more offbeat artists last?

Though she can do a good impersonation of a space cadet, the overall impression of Shorenstein Hays is that underneath her diffidence she's one tough cookie. Tiny and fragile looking, despite her advanced second pregnancy, the producer spoke to the Bay Guardian at length about her plans. Here are excerpts from that interview.

When you took over the Curran Theatre you were 28 and a novice producer. How did you see the theater business? What did you want from it?

Oh, I thought in terms of fireworks like you do when you're young. You know, all the very exciting and dramatic stuff. I don't think I thought all that much, I was just going and opening a theater. If I really had stopped and thought about it, there is no way I would have done it. It was pretty Herculean.

When you took on the Golden Gate and Orpheum Theaters, did you have any blueprint in mind, any overriding goals?

No. I've never had a blueprint. It would be nice to have one, but I always wanted to grow within what I was doing and that was very easy to do. If you start out knowing nothing, then anything that you learn is certainly growth. When I started I wanted to be a part of theater. I never gave it any thought — I just loved the theater and... was given this seemingly fabulous opportunity. I grew into a real knowledge of theater and a sense of who the creative people were.

How would you define your personal taste in theater?

I'm pretty Sam Goldwyn. If it's good, it can be anything. I like seeing new things because I'm not really trained. I majored in political science — that's a whole other art form. I learned Chekhov from going to the theater and then reading, as opposed to the other way around.

Up to now, you've mostly imported New York theater. I wonder what you've thought about the Bay Area theater scene?

Well, I think it's a testament to Bay Area theater that I've brought in Marian Lever, who is from the opera here, so I can look at the arts in a broader stroke. I would love to have an association with a not-for-profit theater. And my associate Tony Reilly is involved with a Bay Area group of playwrights that meets about once a month. That's something that we're developing and percolating, and I don't know what form it's going to take.

At various times you've expressed interest in moving shows up from local nonprofit theaters, or getting involved in co-productions with them. Why has none of that happened?

I was going to move [Berkeley Rep's] Prelude to a Kiss to New York. I was very involved with that, but decided that my focus wasn't New York anymore. So that precluded that. Is the Bay Area audience large enough to move a hit from Berkeley Rep or ACT to one of our theaters? I don't know... it's a whole other economic structure and those numbers are staggering. We're a commercial organization... I mean, of course I'd love to do something, but I think what would probably make more sense is a joint production with Berkeley Rep or ACT or the Magic if we could sit down at a table and say, "Well, let's do a tribute to Irving Berlin or an Easter show," I'm all for that, or a very esoteric piece

LATIN AMERICAN LITERATURE AND CULTURE

EVA THE FUGITIVE

by Rosamel del Valle

Translated, with an Introduction
by Anna Balakian

An early cameo of Latin American surrealism, del Valle's erotic narrative of ecstasy and perdition creates the rhythm of the dream and the tempo of madness. Written in 1930 and finally published posthumously in Venezuela in 1970, Anna Balakian offers the first translation of Eva the Fugitive. She brilliantly conveys in English the author's highly metaphoric language and the immediacy of surrealist experience, signaled in the narrative by frequent lapses into a haunting present tense. In the same genre as Gerard de Nerval's Aurelia, Andre Breton's Nadja, and Michel Leiris's Aurora, this work should be counted among the most compelling works of 20th-century surrealist literature.

SELECTED ODES OF PABLO NERUDA

Translated, with an Introduction

by Margaret Sayers Peden

The atom, a tuna, laziness, love—the everyday elements and essences of human experience glow in the translucent language of Neruda's odes. The Chilean poet and Nobel Prize-winner wrote three books of odes during his lifetime. Peden's selection of odes from all three volumes, printed with the Spanish originals on facing pages, is by far the most extensive yet to appear in English. She vividly conveys the poet's vision of the realities of day-to-day life in her translations, while her brief introduction describes the genesis of the poems. would be terrifically exciting... But when we look at the kind of financial picture we're faced with, how does sharing of costs take place?

So what's the answer?

I would love to come up with a Carole Shorenstein Hays Foundation, and that's all in the hands of lawyers.

That's something you're working on? A foundation to help fund nonprofit projects?

We're talking about it. It's a very complicated tax structure and that's the only thing that prevents it from happening.

You did take a $850,000 risk with August Wilson's Fences, which started out in the nonprofit Seattle Repertory Theatre. What compelled you to do that?

I'd been looking for a play to produce myself for a long time and I thought the writing was exquisite. I was terribly moved; it was a visceral experience. It all seemed to fall into place.

Despite the lukewarm San Francisco notices, Fences hit the Broadway jackpot. Money was made, Tonys and a Pulitzer earned. Why didn't you keep on producing on Broadway?

Well, I'm very happy being a mother. It's very difficult for me to travel now, psychologically and physically. The life of a Broadway producer is a rough, rough life... There were a number of plays that I could have done.

Plays we've heard of?

Yeah, yeah. Prelude to a Kiss, Grapes of Wrath. I was on the inside track so anything that's been done on Broadway since Fences I was offered. I just didn't have that burning desire to do it. I guess... I think there's a lot to be said for ignorance and naivete. Suddenly I started looking at budgets and becoming very responsible about it... I also think great, great success has the potential to be as immobilizing as great failure because you've got those two extremes to live up to. I talked with Michael Bennett [the late director of A Chorus Line] a lot about that...

But now you and Marion Lever are looking outside Broadway for shows to do here. What's the major difference between the kinds of shows in your new season and "Best of Broadway" stuff?

It's more provocative. In many cases it's theater I'd like to see. It's a lot more reduced down, so it's more immediate.

Reduced down?

Yes, it's more in the not-for-profit tradition in that you want to be as daring as you possibly can without losing your audience. That's tricky, but I think you have to push the audience. That's what [Berkeley Rep artistic director] Sharon Ott has done. I mean, she gets pretty far out there and people respect and accept and get titillated by that, which is the antithesis of Broadway musicals, which on the whole are a pretty passive experience. There is nothing wrong with that — I just feel very, very strongly about these plays we're doing. I think they really are exceptionally strong pieces of theater and it excites me to do something just for the joy of doing it, without worrying so much about the economics.

Do these shows put you into direct competition with theaters like ACT and Berkeley Rep? Is it your audience you need to tap?

Maybe so. But I think there's enough audience to go around, as long as the theater is good all around. As long as each organization has really exciting productions then hopefully they will feed off each other. More is better.

Have you gotten any feedback from the other local theaters?

As a matter of fact, they've all been very responsive and helpful and collegial. It's nice because I don't know these people that well. We gave ACT the Orpheum last year after the earthquake and they're going in there again from October to December. I think you only get nervous when you feel threatened. That isn't what we are setting out to do.

Are you interested in seeing more collaboration between commercial and nonprofit theaters?

Well, since subsidized funding has become more difficult, it does make it easier to sit around a table with people and say, "This is what I have in mind and this is what I want to do and how do we do it together?" I think it would be great to work with Sharon Ott. I wanted her to direct a Vaclav Havel play at the Marines, but it didn't work out with our schedules.

So you see yourself moving farther away from being a landlord, and more into putting your own productions together?

Oh, yeah. I think it's all in steps. In business the best deals are made over brandy and on the golf course. On our level, the great ideas come out of the safeness of a friendship. That's what I'm looking to do, to get closer with the younger playwrights and theater people, like the people doing Stand Up Tragedy and Juan Darien. I think they have great, great careers in front of them, and working with them is a very different experience from working with a Neil Simon.

You've been doing an unusual amount of personal promotion for these plays.

Well, our ad budget is miniscule. And I know these shows are wonderful and dynamic, I know they are shows that would make me want to get out of the house. I don't go out that much, so for me to say that is a great endorsement.

Of the four offerings Buddy, the rock musical, seems pretty mainstream, sort of an odd man out.

Well, it is. Actually, it's going from here to the Schubert Theatre in New York, where A Chorus Line was. To me, there was nothing wrong with that. It's good old solid entertainment. I think it's nice to have a smorgasbord of things.

How successful does this season have to be for you to continue on this track? Is it selling as well you'd hoped?

No. Economically, no. We really did this as a seat-of-your-pants thing and as a result we made a lot of mistakes.

Like what?

Well, maybe we shouldn't be doing our first show in August... that type of thing. You learn as you go along. I think we can't judge ourselves on one season. To me it's the fact that we're doing the plays at all... because Marion only started in January and we kind of groped around a lot.

What crowd are you trying to pull in?

I don't know. In all honesty I thought we would have garnered a lot more of the not-for-profit audiences immediately. Maybe we just weren't penetrating the arena right. It's hard because it's new for us, it's not like selling a splashy musical. I think our challenge is really to get the yuppies, and that's hard because there are so many distractions and diversions and the competition from restaurants.

Maybe nonprofit theatergoers are balking at $35 a ticket.

Well, that's hard. Our break-even point at the Marines is 82 percent capacity. I would have liked to have gone with a lower ticket price. I couldn't do it. If anything, we probably should have gone higher, but that didn't make any sense. I'd like to think that a few dollars won't stop people from going to something they really want to see. But it's very tough now; it's not the good old heydays — the good old 80s — for anyone anymore. Even for Donald and Ivana, you know? Maybe in some ways it's good because we have to figure things out, really pay attention to every bit of money we spend. Nothing wrong with that.

If this new approach isn't very profitable, will you just go back to pre-tested Broadway fare?

I don't know. I would be less than honest if I didn't say we're looking into other projects, but we haven't finalized anything yet. I'm kind of standing back and paying 100 percent attention to these four shows... I could stop after that.

This year you have taken a few other stylistic risks, like bringing Bill Irwin's postmodern comedy, Largely New York to the Golden Gate. Did it pay off?

No, it didn't. We were the only big theater outside of New York to pick it up, though every large and small theater owner in the United States tripped over here to see the show. They were pretty amazed we were doing it. It was wildly successful artistically and we lost money on it, but... If I've got to lose I'd rather lose on that.

I'd like to raise a different topic. Lately you've expressed concern about how the worsening homeless epidemic is affecting Market Street, near the Golden Gate and the Orpheum. You said you wanted to help Art Agnos to do something about changing the area. What's become of that?

Well, I've had a meeting with him. It was the first time I ever met with a mayor and that was kind of interesting.

The first time you ever met with any mayor? You never met with Dianne Feinstein when she was mayor?

No. As a matter of fact, I had to badger her to come to Fences. She came and was going to leave at intermission but she stayed... and she came to the party afterward and just sort of showed up there glad-handing everyone... I told Agnos, "Come on, we've got to do something. Not just city government, but all of us." He put us on a task force and that's been good because we've met people within the community.

Within the homeless community?

No. Within the business community of the Tenderloin. I told the mayor I would like to participate in some programs. I think it's wrong for us to look solely at government to solve these issues. It would be a nice thought, but it's not reality.

What kind of programs? Do you have any ideas?

I think it would be great if the [vacant Market Street] Hibernia Bank was turned into an adjunct of City College or a sports center or the mayor's residence. It's important to bring in another element down here. I think that the worst thing that could happen would be another homeless shelter in the area. A homeless shelter should be put out in the Avenues. It should be across the street from where I live, fine with me, but I think you have to shake things up... If you have the same element everywhere it's not going to solve the problem. And I think we have to have more social services down here, clearly. I'd love to turn this [the Golden Gate Theatre office building] into an arts center. I've been trying to give the space away to ACT, to the city. Everyone goes "Oh, sounds good, but..."

They won't take it because of the location?

Yes. The curious fact to me is that there has never been one incident in our theaters, not a purse snatching, not anything... But we really do have to do something because it's getting worse. I really think that if there were a great civic leader who could galvanize people and create a vista, like in the Sixties. Someone to say "This is what we all stand for and this is what we all need to do..."

Is Agnos that leader?

I don't know. I really don't know. I'd like to think yes.

Did you approve when he roused the homeless from the Civic Center, just around the corner from the Orpheum?

I would have done it a lot earlier. I think it was well, well overdue. I say that and I think we have to buoy up our social services. [But] there are a lot of dirt balls, bums who are sociopaths and a burden on society. My social justice doesn't go out to them all that much. Maybe that's where my liberalism has stopped, because it's an encroachment on the public sector... I do think we really need the monies being put into the mental health programs... But to me it isn't a question of raising taxes. I kind of flinch at that. Break it down for me. If you're going to raise my taxes $5 explain to me where that $5 is going to go and then maybe I'll say yes. I think it's not a question so much of money as of spirit and commitment.

And how about political commitments? Your father has been a key supporter of liberal Democratic Party candidates. Do you see a similar role for yourself? Perhaps in the next presidential election?

To some extent. I mean, that's like Broadway, isn't it? That's the big race. I would love if Bill Bradley ran. That's a campaign I would jump into in a second... I would love to get involved in the media campaign.

Why Bill Bradley?

I think he's a person who... is not a liberal just to be liberal. That's not the answer in this day and age... I don't think great bureaucracies solve the problems. The money has to be there but it has to be thought through differently.

Over the years some people have wondered if you were just toying with the theater business, whether you would stick it out. Do you feel you're in it for the long haul?

What's the long haul? Till I die? (Laughs.)

Do you see this as an ongoing source of interest and creativity to you? Are you getting bored with it yet?

The reason we're doing the series is because that feeling started encroaching, the sense of doing things second-hand started creeping in. Since I'm not going to go to New York, what can I do that holds intrigue for me? That isn't safe? If you do things that are safe in the arts, more often than not are not interesting... I think I'll be in this as long as I feel like I'm making a contribution. But I once thought, and often still think, it's good to completely change jobs every 15 years.

What would be your next job?

There are so many different things. I could be a gardener. I would be a volunteer gardener at Fioli and be marvelously happy. You know, just things that I haven't done. I'd love to move the family to Utah for a couple of years. I don't look at what I'm doing as having that kind of straight line thing. I do hope that we will keep renewing ourselves and refreshing ourselves and doing things with a different twist around here. The challenge is to stay through the good times and the bad times and just have that baseline enjoyment of it and respect for it. For me there's still nothing better than standing in the back of the house — preferably during a sold-out performance. ■

"I was a lousy journalist because when I didn't have a story, I would invent things": Isabel Allende talks about life before fiction.

JUST ANOTHER INCARNATION

Isabel Allende talks about love, politics and life in suburban California

By Kate Scheinman

WE JUST don't expect a writer who creates a world of lush, enchanted jungles, yellow-eyed Indians and clairvoyant matriarchs to live around the corner from a mall. That's why several years ago readers were astonished to learn that Isabel Allende had married a gringo lawyer, attained United States citizenship and settled down in suburban San Rafael. But the author of The House of the Spirits and niece of assassinated Chilean president Salvador Allende Gossens downplays the transition. "In terms of my own life, it's really not so surprising," Allende says. "As a matter of fact, I've lost everything and started all over again several times now."

Allende's writing is admittedly autobiographical. She depicts the loss of her first life through The House of the Spirits, a tribute to Chile's historical tragedy and the values of her martyred uncle. In her second book, Of Love and Shadows, Allende gives a painfully personal account of exile.

Allende worked as a columnist in Santiago until General Augusto Pinochet's right-wing takeover in 1973, when she and her then-husband fled to Venezuela. With no money, no visa and no luck finding work as a journalist, she struggled for years to rebuild her life.

The horror of Allende's experience is ever-present in her writing, but she prefers talking about her life today. "People always want me to talk about my biography and that's hard," she explains, "first because I have a bad memory, and second because it's boring by now."

As we sit in her sunny living room, I resolve to avoid any topic that might possibly bore her. She is the kind of person you naturally want to please, and love to hear laugh. At 48, she is a beautiful, tiny woman with a weakness for ratty little dogs. The one she holds now looks at her with lovesick eyes as she strokes him with light, quick movements. She visibly brightens when we talk about her new collection of short stories, her children and William, the new husband she met on a lecture tour in San Jose.

What was the inspiration for your collection of short stories?

In most of the Stories by Eva Luna, I just took the news from a newspaper and transformed it into a story. For example, some years ago there was a tragedy in Colombia when there was a volcanic eruption on a snow-covered mountain. The snow melted and flooded a village below. One little girl got trapped in the mud, and she remained there for four days. Somehow, cameras from all over the world got there, with the cables and all of the equipment — but nobody could get the one machine that could pump water into the mud and free the little girl. And so she died four days later. I wrote that story, but I didn't write the story of the little girl. I wrote the story of someone affected by the story. Reality is so rich that really you don't have to invent much. Sometimes what is behind reality will do just fine. In my writing, I am always interested in passions, obsessions, violence, death and love. When I see something like this little trapped girl and the cameras, I try to imagine the passions around that and how it could have happened — and what were the consequences for everyone involved.

Do you consider yourself a "magical realist"?

Yes, I accept the title because it has been widely used and we all agree on what it means. It's funny because on the one hand, Latin Americans feel very angry about the term "magical realism" and when they see it in literature, except Garcia Marquez, they feel that it is phony and that to use it is like cheating, in the sense that it is something we have created for touristic purposes. On the other hand, in Europe and in the U.S., the term is very exotic, and people want it and seek it out. As Latin Americans, we want to compare ourselves with civilized nations all the time, and we don't want to be labeled as crazy, weird magic people, and we tend to deny that aspect of our reality. But Garcia Marquez did not invent it, nor Alejo Carpentier. It was always there.

When Carpentier was living in the '30s in Europe, he was living with a group of surrealists who were working on this idea of putting things together that had nothing in common. By creating a new reality — for example, a sewing machine on a dissecting table with an umbrella — that would create a surrealistic painting. But Carpentier said, "Well, if I go to Cuba, I don't have to put those things together, you will have the donkey sitting on the piano and the blind whore singing anyway." So you don't have to invent it, it's there. And that's exactly what he expressed. All the superstitions, myths, legends, violence, dictatorships — all that creates a very surrealistic world. If Kafka had been born in Mexico, he would have been writing realistic literature. So I think we have to admit

'You don't have to invent [magical realism], it's there. . . All the superstitions, myths, legends, violence, dictatorships — all that creates a very surrealistic world.'

both things. There is an exotic element, and maybe it has been used as a literary device very often, but it would have been impossible to create without the reality in the background.

Stories by Eva Luna is the first time you have written short stories.

Yes, and I had a hard time at first. There's not a very long tradition of short stories in Latin American literature, although the oral telling of short stories has existed for centuries. So I didn't have very many models. Short stories are much closer to poetry. You need tension, and it's all in the way you tell the story; the content and characters are much less important.

Have you had any problems publishing Stories by Eva Luna?

All my publishers have complained a lot, first because the market for short stories is small, and second because I've insisted on keeping the "stories" part in the title. The book would sell a lot better if I called it something like "Naughty Girl," for example. But in my opinion, that's cheating the readers, who are often not aware that they are buying short stories. They [came out] in January, however, with the title I wanted.

How has your work as a journalist affected your work as a fiction writer?

I've never made the transition, really. I was a lousy journalist because when I didn't have a story, I would invent things, or else I would put myself in the middle of the story and lose all objectivity. Then again, you can apply all the techniques you learn in journalism to writing literature. I still do my research in the streets, rather than in libraries. When I wanted to write about the turn of the century in Venezuela for Eva Luna, I went to the newspapers to read about what people were worried about then, what kind of clothes they wore, what kind of cars were in the streets, otherwise it would be very hard to get the picture. So in that sense, the research I do is very journalistic.

Many of your most evil, military characters have a great deal of character depth. How do you research that kind of character?

When I was teaching at Berkeley, I used to explain to the students that the writer has to understand the motivation of the characters, regardless of how horrifying the motivation could be. When the character is very hateful to you or you know very little about them, the best thing to do is find a model. I had to do that because my general feeling is that everything that wears a uniform is basically evil, and basically stupid. I had to understand

POOR LITTLE FOOL

The short life and sad times of Ricky Nelson

RICKY NELSON: IDOL FOR A GENERATION. By Joel Selvin. Contemporary Books, 331 pages, $18.95.

By Derk Richardson

IN 1959, Imperial Records released the third album by teen idol Ricky Nelson. According to Joel Selvin, "Ricky Sings Again was as good as 1950s rock albums got.... Ricky's remarkable transformation from worshipful imitator to worthy member of the elite of rock & roll was complete." In what will likely remain the definitive biography of Rick Nelson, Selvin attempts to establish the late teen idol's credentials as a major creative force in the evolution of rock'n'roll. The 17-year-old TV star's 1958 double-sided single, "Believe What You Say"/"My Bucket's Got a Hole in It," "easily equaled the best of the Southern rockabilly," writes Selvin. With that release, "Ricky Nelson firmly planted himself in the forefront of contemporary rock & roll."

Selvin, no stranger to Bay Area music fans as the sometimes controversial pop music critic for the San Francisco Chronicle, may be overstating his case for the artistic significance of the "sunniest of California's golden boys.... the celebrated son of an almost mythical American family" and "the California rockabilly he had honed to perfection." If the early Nelson sound, essentially shaped by the contributions of Louisiana guitarist James Burton, did exert an influence on such latter-day California bands as Creedence Clearwater Revival, even Selvin has to admit that Nelson would not have been inducted into the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame in 1987 if he hadn't perished when his rickety private DC-3 crashed on New Year's Eve day, 1985. "He wanted to be Carl Perkins," Selvin writes, "but people always saw him as Fabian."

As a music critic, Selvin cannot shy away from the fact that the vast majority of Ricky Nelson's recorded output was schlock. Of more than 30 studio, live and compilation albums, only a handful are memorable. But what makes Ricky Nelson an intriguing story is the singer's lifelong struggle to come to terms with the conflicting forces of his overbearing father, his phenomenal adolescent stardom, his rock'n'roll impulses and his disastrous marriage. The tragedy is that, with a few fleeting exceptions, he never did.

Rick Nelson does not emerge from this well-researched biography as a completely sympathetic character: He comes off as a fundamentally nice kid who soured around the edges from overexposure. He seems to have easily succumbed to many of the less admirable aspects of the Hollywood fast-lane lifestyle, including drugs, womanizing and part-time parenthood. He aspired to be a serious songwriter, but had neither the intellectual gifts nor the discipline to develop the craft; he tended to escape his troubles by shutting out the world and sleeping late.

But the dark side of the lost young man who bridged Elvis Presley and Frankie Avalon comes off as rather benign in light of the manipulators and connivers who surrounded him. These characters are less the music industry types who mangled his career — although plenty of callous and sleazy business dealings crop up — than the intimate antagonists in his immediate family: his father, Ozzie, and his wife, Kris Harmon.

"Music began for Rick as a way to escape the oppression of the family TV show," Selvin explains, "except that Ozzie found a way to usurp even that. Rick nevertheless doggedly pursued the craft, pushing himself and growing rapidly with the experience, making his records far better than they needed to be. He knew how good those California rockabilly sides were, and he knew he never got credit for his accomplishments. His TV fame and teen-idol image confused the issue."

Ozzie Nelson, the conservative bandleader-turned-stammering-head-of-idealized-middle-class-household, "knew he had a gold mine in his cottage industry, fashioning a mythic American family out of his real one," Selvin writes. He controlled every aspect not only of The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet, but of Ricky's burgeoning career in music. Ozzie's interference, from the selection of material to musical arrangements, was inescapable. In his early encounters with the senior Nelson, producer/arranger Jimmie Haskell learned a lesson that Ricky lived with all his life: "From now on, when Ozzie makes any suggestions, I will understand that that's what he wants."

Rick seemed to have internalized his dad's oppression into a complex of self-defeating patterns that continued to stifle his career. His marriage to Kris Harmon, daughter of legendary football hero/sports announcer Tom Harmon, only exacerbated his dilemma. Older brother David, talking about the late 1960s, offered the opinion that "the biggest problem Rick had during that time was Kris pushing him." The problem, as sketched out by Selvin, continued and was magnified by Kris's ability to spend more than Rick could bring in from his stalled career, leading to the life of one-night stands and cost-cutting that ultimately resulted in the fatal plane crash.

If Selvin is not a consistently compelling storyteller in Ricky Nelson, he is a painstaking journalist, and he manages to pierce "the veil of privacy" surrounding the Nelson family through a vast number of detailed reminiscences from Rick's friends, acquaintances and musical collaborators. Sometimes we get more dry facts — names, dates and places — than we need, although the tracing of band personnel, recording sessions, record company intrigues and tour dates is fascinating for anyone with more than a passing interest in popular music.

Some of the most revealing stories are ostensibly incidental, like songwriter Baker Knight's brief account of writing "Lonesome Town," a reflection that sums up Ricky's personal trap: "It was Hollywood. I was sitting in the middle of this whole thing. I was broke, didn't know what I was going to do. My manager was giving me a few bucks, keeping me going, paying my rent." But Selvin also tackles the big issue of Ricky's death with convincing evidence that the fiery plane crash was caused by a malfunctioning cabin heater and not by a freebasing episode gone awry.

Working with little firsthand input from any Nelson other than David, Selvin constructs (or, in his own favorite verbs, "sculpts" and "etches") a portrait of Rick Nelson from the outside, a perspective well-suited to a pop figure who was often a "detached observer" of his own life, but one that leaves Rick's emotional and psychological essence floating through the book like a shadow. The writing is smooth and workmanlike with only a few purple lapses, like the account of "those horrifying final minutes" and the "surprise" Citizen Kane tag at the end. What may be surprising to some is that Selvin, who often provokes his newspaper readership with stinging attacks on the biggest pop stars, approaches this one with such compassion. He evokes great empathy for someone who ultimately seems less important for what he did by his own initiative than for what happened to him and eluded his control. ■

EPIDEMIC VISION

Paul Monette's novel, 'Afterlife,' is a crash course on living and dying with AIDS

AFTERLIFE. By Paul Monette. Crown Publishers, 287 Pages, $19.95.

By Marcy Shelnor

IN THE nonfictional Borrowed Time: An AIDS Memoir, Paul Monette wrote, "There is just what work I can finish before it overtakes me." In Afterlife, a novel, Monette proves that he is determined to go on working, despite the loss of lover and friends, and the fear that he himself will lose the capacity to do so.

Afterlife is the story of three men who meet in the hospital while on deathwatch for their lovers. Steven, the main character, was Victor's mate for some eight or nine years prior to his death, and is the oldest, most stable member of the triad, almost a father figure. Sonny, young, mystical and drop-dead gorgeous, returns to a life of detached one-night stands after losing Ellsworth, the only man he ever felt truly connected to. Dell, a Mexican emigre, becomes a lone AIDS terrorist after his lover's death, making anonymous phone calls saying he's dumped contaminated blood into the water supply, eventually escalating to more violent actions. The cast of characters also includes Steven's best friend and co-worker, Margaret, who loses her homophobic lover when she becomes caretaker to Ray, another co-worker with AIDS; Dell's sister Linda, who had married her brother's lover in order to become an American citizen, and Mark, a television bigwig who, in the wake of his diagnosis, falls in love, for the first time in his life, with Steven.

Through a series of events, the three widows (Steven, Sonny and Dell) end up living together in Steven's house, forming an uneasy alliance among widely disparate personalities who probably wouldn't have been drawn together were it not for their intense common experience. The relationships among the characters are rich and complex, evocative of novels that deal with traditional family dynamics. Without ever polemicalizing, Monette conveys the strong sense of family that often exists among a group of gay friends and lovers.

As is to be expected in any literature on AIDS, certain themes recur: the homophobia and neglect of the larger culture; denial, terror and grief; the awkwardness of support groups and "positive thinking" philosophies; the grueling process of caring for the dying. Those familiar with the realities of the epidemic will identify with these issues, while those who aren't will receive a crash course, not only in living and dying with AIDS, but also gay life in general.

From the first page, Afterlife evokes an atmosphere of loss and grief: Mundane items haunt Steven as he moves through everyday tasks. Cellophane reminds him of the wrapping around hypodermic needles; a bar of soap recalls Victor's smell. Amid this atmosphere, moments of sharp humor occur: Preparing a salad for a dinner party, Steven cuts his finger and drips blood all over the lettuce. When Dell enters the kitchen he says, "Gee, Steven, you'll have to give me this recipe... HIV salad. Looks scrumptious." As Steven falls apart, Margaret takes control, whipping up "a bloodless salad."

When Mark leaves his high-level job after his diagnosis, Steven jokingly tells him he can come work at his travel agency. "But there's one thing you need to know," says Mark. "I'm sort of dying." "Well," Steven quips, "you'll fit right in then. All our male staff is on respirators. That's our motto at Shaw Travel: Keep moving, even if it's just a twitch." When Mark and Steven finally succumb to the attraction they've been desperately denying, they lightly joke about how many years they may have together. As they head for the bedroom, "the laughter continued, rippling under the door... no one was ever supposed to laugh, yet there it was, like a knife through butter."

When it comes to AIDS, or any tragedy for that matter, gallows humor is not unexpected. What is unexpected is the streak of fierce romanticism that runs like an undercurrent through Afterlife. The flashback description of Sonny's meeting with Ellsworth, for instance, is on a par with Romeo's first glimpse of Juliet. Steven misses Victor the way one would miss an amputated limb. The affair between him and Mark is thick with the pathos of those who know that one may end up nursing the other through illness. It is as if Monette refuses to relinquish faith in the hope and glory of romantic love, even in the face of unspeakable horror, and this faith carries the reader through the agony of the story in the same way that it has carried so many through the epidemic.

Not surprisingly, though, spurts of gallows humor and romantic moments are mere punctuation marks in the prevailing atmosphere of the "catastrophe," the term Monette uses to describe the epidemic. Emotional passages bring the reader to tears, as when Mark comes out to his father as both gay and HIV-positive, or when, at a Thanksgiving dinner, Heather, a young, naive woman, falls to her knees before Ray's wheelchair and sobs in his lap. The dramatic moments are moving without being maudlin; the humor is truly witty, not forced; the characters are, despite their flaws, so fully developed as to be irresistible.

While Afterlife is an absorbing novel, the writing deteriorates slightly toward the end. For instance, Monette repeatedly refers to Ray as "the Korean," something that could be construed as racist, were it not for the frequent referrals to Dell as "the gardener." The device isn't political, but simply bad writing. "As she struggled to sit herself down two rows in front of Dell, the gardener stood up to help her with her bags." Why didn't Monette just say "he"? By this point, Dell has become more identified in the reader's mind as an outlaw than a gardener anyway, and the label is annoyingly distracting. Also, toward the end, some events are overly analyzed to the point of tedium. Luckily, these shortcomings don't occur until the final third of the book, by which time the reader is fully engrossed in the story.

Fiction that deals with the AIDS epidemic will inevitably be evaluated from the perspective of how the subject matter is dealt with, rather than on literary merit alone. At one point Steven tells Mark, "I expect it all to be horrible, and it is." "AIDS or life?" Mark asks. "There's a difference?" Steven replies. In the same way that AIDS has become a fact of contemporary living, writing about the epidemic will become absorbed into the fabric of modern literature. A good read is a good read, and hopefully this one won't be relegated to a ghetto of "AIDS writing," but will instead find the broad readership it deserves.

that there are reasons why some people join the military and do what they do. So I found some models and interviewed them extensively until I got what I needed. I couldn't have made those military figures up. The real people gave me their characters.

How do you feel about the changes taking place in Chile?

It's excellent. People are impatient and they want big changes now, they want all the criminals to be punished and they want the disappeared to appear, but that's impossible. What has happened will affect one or two generations, this is unavoidable. We have to remember, we have to forgive and start living for the future, not for the past. You cannot respond to violence with violence because that's a never-ending circle. People have understood that, at least most of the leaders have. And although many people are angry in Chile, and many are impatient, I think it's important that things are changing slowly and cautiously.

Recently, the exiled Chilean poet Ariel Dorfman went back to Chile to witness the transfer of power from Pinochet to Aylwin and the new regime. He described the people as euphoric, but he sensed a quiet beneath their joy.

That makes sense. After 16 years of terror, people are afraid. This is still true of Argentina — even after many years of democracy, people are still afraid that the military might come back. After all, the military structure remains completely intact.

Why is it that when male characters are important in your novels, they are almost always emotionally unbalanced and devoured by their revolutionary or right-wing politics?

In Eva Luna, Eva's roommate Mimi is a transsexual who in one line sums up the theme you are talking about. She claims that when Eva's revolutionary guerrilla lover achieves the changes he is after, he will use his power in exactly the same way the right-wing leaders use it. Eva then asks, "Well, then who's going to make the changes?" and Mimi, who is a total marginal, a transsexual, a strange creature who stands on the edge of everything, says "We are," and she means that if someone is going to make real changes, it will be the marginals, who are not interested in power, who have something totally new to propose because they have nothing to lose. What I have seen with these great revolutionaries, these wonderful idealists that sometimes give their lives for a revolution, is that when they win, they become rigid, severe powerful people who above all want to hold on to that power. The other strange thing is that the men who have used women during each step of a struggle will send them right back to the positions they had before the revolution when they achieve victory. I said that once in Cuba, and let me tell you, it was terrible.

Most of the central sympathetic characters in your novels are women, and you focus on relationships between mothers and daughters. Why are there no good father figures in your writing?

I have a very strong bond with my mother; I believe it is the longest and most important relationship in my life. On the other hand, I never had a very important male influence in my life, except for my grandfather, who was very patriarchal and authoritarian — I loved him very much, but he was no model. My stepfather unfortunately came into my life very late, so he wasn't there in my earliest childhood, which is an important time. That may be the reasons that the fathers in my books always run away or die or just don't exist. It's hard for me to imagine a good father, a man who is there and takes your hand and helps you through life... I just can't visualize it.

What kind of feelings do you have about your uncle, Salvador Allende?

He was just another uncle, really. I never worked for his government. He was a very charismatic man, very warm and funny. He was the kind of person that when he entered a room, filled the space with his presence. And when he talked to you, he gave you the impression that you were the most important person in the world. He made you feel that what you had to say was extremely important. In Chile, we say he had muneca, which means wrist, the ability to really turn you around in your thinking. His enemies would never want to speak to him for that reason — he was so convincing.

Why are all of your women characters clairvoyant or exceptionally strong or otherwise eccentric?

Perhaps because I never identified with any of the women living around me in Chile. I was born into a generation of women who were not supposed to be creative. We could paint, as long as what we painted wasn't upsetting: children's faces, flowers, nice things... but don't mess around. Poetry, but not erotic or political stuff. You can't imagine what a burden education can be in the part of the world that I came from. My mother wasn't a role model, and neither were any of the other women around me, they all had shitty lives. The kind of life I wanted for myself was the life of my stepfather. But I didn't want to be like him, so this is where the conflict came in. Women had to pay a high price in aggression and repression to achieve during that time, but I was willing to pay that price. Women can really liberate themselves by releasing their creativity.

Spirits and ghosts play an important part in your writing. Do these kind of creatures exist for you?

I don't believe that when you bury someone, it's the end. I believe in the soul and the spirit. My grandmother, for example, is with me, though she died 40 years ago. She exists vividly for me as a protective spirit. I don't talk about it much because it sounds rather crazy. On the other hand, I don't go to witches or tarot or palm readers — I think there are other ways of getting in touch with your own spirituality. I don't belong to any organized church either.

Was it very hard to adjust to living with a California family in San Rafael?

The first date took a lot of adjusting. When I met William, I had this fantasy about the lifestyle of a California lawyer. When we went to his house I thought, hmm... champagne, caviar. When we got to his garage, it was so full of dog crap that I couldn't even get out of the car. He had this dingy studio in Sausalito and a totally hyperactive, spoiled child. When I first began raising my stepson, English was still very hard for me. I had trouble with the simplest phrases, like "Don't lean back on the chair," "Do your own dishes" and "Flush the toilet."

Have you found your epic love in William?

We take it a day at a time, but in my mind, he is the love of my life. Not just for this life, but for all possible lives. It might not work out that way, but if I don't commit myself with that intensity, I don't live it with that intensity, and then life becomes very banal. You can have a mediocre life if you want to, and you can have a splendid, passionate life if you choose to. I don't want a nice relationship, I want the most romantic, the most passionate, the most literary relationship possible. Then if it doesn't work, well, at least I tried. If I don't commit myself now for the possibility of being betrayed or disappointed in the future, then my life would be a very small, little life.

Can you imagine writing about a little white family living in San Rafael?

Why not? I mean, little white families that live around here are at least as crazy as families anywhere else. Actually, I don't think I've ever seen so much craziness anywhere as I have in California. On my first trip, I went back to Venezuela saying that I had spent some days in a place where I hadn't met one normal person — all anybody could talk about was Buddhism and Zen and organic hot tubs and channeling!

Do you have a new preoccupation?

There is something, but I can't tell you what it is. I have this terrible superstition that if I talk about it, I will lose it. When you talk about something, it becomes less painful and dramatic, and later you can't give the same intensity to the writing. ■

ASK ISADORA

A MORAL MINORITY

By Isadora Alman

Q: A few years ago my then-fiance John and I moved out of our home to live separately. Some months later we broke up entirely, though we remained good friends. Not long afterward, he started going out with and then moved in with my best friend Gertie. Since then she has broken off her relationship with me entirely, and has jealous fits if he mentions my name. John keeps encouraging me to remain friends with her. I've done my best to restore our friendship but am continually rejected. Consequently, John wants us to remain friends surreptitiously, behind her back. Other mutual friends agree, even my current sweetheart. I dearly treasure John's friendship but I don't want to be dishonest — partly from my own sense of integrity, but also because I think that their relationship is too important to risk through deceit. He thinks I'm moralizing. I think it seems less risky in the long run for him to stand up to Gertie now and continue our friendship than to pretend I have disappeared but see me anyway. I'm deeply disturbed about this. What should I do?

I asked a sex worker of my acquaintance and her reply was, 'I wouldn't be putting my fingers up there unless I wanted the guy to have a good time'...

A: What do you want to do? Sometimes putting the question to yourself in that way clarifies the situation. If the answer is impossible, such as "I want to see him and I want that to be all right with her," keep on phrasing the options that do exist in terms of what you want to do rather than what you ought to do. Focus your concern not on your opinion of what is best for the two of them, but what is best for you, your relationship with yourself first, and then your relationship with John, since you have none with Gertie. Shakespeare said it better than I have: "To thine own self be true... thou canst not then be false to any man."

Q: I have been fascinated recently with various "no sex" erotic service ads that appear in adult tabloids offering prostate massage by attractive young women. Am I safe to assume that I am expected to masturbate myself while receiving this digital prostate massage? I am too embarrassed to ask.

A: When an ad says "no sex" that may mean only no intercourse. It could also mean no genital contact (which is against the law) or it could mean "What we want to do in this ad is minimize the chance of being busted, so come on in and once we assure ourselves that you're not a cop, we'll negotiate." I asked a sex worker of my acquaintance what might be expected under such circumstances and her reply was, "I wouldn't be putting my fingers up there unless I wanted the guy to have a good time," so my guess is that you are correct in your assumption. I would ask, but if you are too embarrassed to say "Do you mind if I...?" you could just go ahead and do it, hoping the masseuse won't gasp "What are you doing?" Or you could relax and allow her to do you her way and see what happens.

Q: I am currently involved in a wonderful relationship with my sister. I'm 24; she's 20. For many years we tried to deny our mutual attraction. However, in the last year we have come to realize that societal restrictions are less important than a true meeting of souls. What started as gentle strokes and fondling has escalated into the most caring sexual relationship I have ever experienced. Last month she mentioned how nice it would be if we could only have a child. Last night, as we were snuggling, she brought up the idea again. I felt that although it's a nice idea, the risk of genetic disease outweighs the benefits. On the other hand, I'm no medical expert. What are the odds of having a healthy child?

A: If that is your only concern, the person to address it is a genetic counselor who will need to take an extremely thorough family medical history to come up with an educated guess. In my opinion there need to be a few other considerations as well. Your existing family, for one, and how they might deal with such an open acknowledgment of your relationship. Not that they need to be happy about your choice, but your sister is still underage in some states and your relationship is flat out illegal (therefore punishable) in many others. You really must evaluate how you two (or three or more) would live in a world that views violation of the incest taboo as a crime, a sickness and/or a sin before you plan any family additions.

THE ART OF EATING

SOMA's Limbo serves tasty food — and donates half its profits to art

By Janet Hazen

LIMBO, OPEN nearly eight months now, is a South of Market restaurant/cafe dedicated to serving inexpensive food and to building a stronger arts community in the Bay Area. Fifty percent of Limbo's proceeds go to the San Francisco Artspace, a contemporary art and performance gallery located next door to the restaurant. Art videos, shown on monitors, and other works by local artists are exhibited in this lively, animated eating space.

Great distractions in the form of videos, music, loud chatter and servers bustling here and there make for a hectic lunch. This is definitely a people-watching joint — it's a perfect restaurant for eating alone. One of the good things about this menu is that almost every dish comes in small or large portions, and sandwiches can be ordered by the half or whole. This gives the diner more choices when ordering lunch or dinner, and also makes it easier to eat lighter.

We began with a large Caesar salad ($6.95) made of wet, whole outer leaves of romaine, dressed in a very thick, assertive dressing, heavy on the anchovies. I rather like a robust dressing for this classic salad, but the soggy, overdressed lettuce almost ruined this plate.

P.C. Tuna Salad (small, $4.95) was plebeian but pleasant, described on the menu as Tongol tuna with water chestnuts and house mayonnaise on a bed of mixed greens, radishes, tomatoes and cucumbers. But when the dish arrived, it was just familiar tuna salad, served on a bed of overdressed greens. I pointed this out to the server and he responded first by telling me this was an old menu and the vegetable items had been "discontinued," and then he graciously brought me a small plate of tomatoes and cucumbers.

A focaccia pizza ($6.95) made with shiitake and oyster mushrooms, tomatoes, mozzarella and provolone cheeses and fresh basil was served warm, not hot, and was slightly soggy, but pretty tasty all in all.

Limbo's vegetarian black bean chili ($4.50) was excellent, served with a garnish of sour cream, cheddar cheese and a basket of warm, delightfully thick tortilla chips. Well-balanced, carefully cooked and seasoned with just the right combination of spices, this is a wonderful bowl of food.

Dinner seems to be just as popular as lunch — not surprisingly when you consider the wide range of food, low prices and convenient, hip location. We started our meal with a basket of three crisp, cumin seed papadum ($2), that irresistible deep-fried Indian flat bread, perfect for dipping in the yogurt sauce (raita) or chutney. Black bean fritters ($2.75), also deep fried, were spicy, crisp on the exterior, and almost creamy inside. The deep, flavorful sauce that accompanied the fritters, seasoned with what tasted like a combination of cloves, cinnamon, allspice and Latin American spices, was very good. Onion rings ($2.50), thickly cut and covered with a doughy breading, were soggy and heavy when they could have been thin, crisp and golden brown.

The wine list is short but interesting, and very reasonable. A 1987 Cotes du Rhone ($12.50) was very drinkable, pleasant and went perfectly with all of our food.

Fish and chips ($6.95) is one of my favorite things to eat, and Limbo's version was very good. Mild-tasting chunks of fish and very thin, crisp french fries were both fried to a crispy, light golden brown and served with a thin lemon mayonnaise. Grilled curried chicken breast ($7.95) is a real deal. Mildly spiced and grilled, the chicken breast was surprisingly tender and was good with the raita, chutney, basmati rice, yellow squash and broccoli it was served with. I wish the chutney at Limbo had more character — it feels almost pureed, and it could certainly use a blend of more flavorful spices.

One of the specials of the evening, sauteed snapper ($9.75), was quite good. The fish, carefully cooked and served on a bed of red pepper sauce, had a fresh corn garnish and was served with rice and wonderful sauteed spinach.

The mixed cuisine, casual atmosphere and low prices at Limbo are just what this neighborhood needs. While the food may not knock your socks off, it's wholesome, fresh and sometimes quite good. I feel that the kitchen is a bit sloppy. If more time and attention were paid to the details on the menu, on the plates and in the kitchen, the food would be more consistent and could sparkle.

Limbo, 299 9th St, SF, 255-9945. Mon., 11:30 am-3pm; Tues.-Thurs., 11:30 am-10pm; Fri.-Sat., 11:30 am-midnight. Visa, MasterCard, American Express. Reservations accepted for parties of six or more. No-smoking section. Wheelchair accessible.

MICRO FILMS

Bye Bye Blues

Were you an adult during WWII? Then you'll identify utterly with writer/director Anne Wheeler's time flawlessly remembered movie. Rebecca Jenkins loves her pampered British Army life as an officer's wife in 1941 wartime India, but when husband Michael Ontkian's transferred to Singapore, then later taken prisoner by the Japanese, she and her two children have to return to her parents' home in Canada. There's no news of Ontkian, her letters are returned and a Brit bureaucratic snafu loses her army paychecks. Jenkins is a typical product of her time, a virgin when she married and with no skills whatsoever beyond hearth and home. She can sing a little and chord on the piano, but it takes local band trombone player Luke Reilly to develop her talent and fall in love with her. Amazingly, she makes the band soar, but it's the myriad insights into her friends' and family's lives that make the film ring so true. It drags slightly before the end but Jenkins is flawless throughout, right up to finally facing the most difficult decision of her life. (Opens Fri/17 at the Lumiere, SF)

Mo' Better Blues

The most appropriate song for this Spike Lee movie would have been "What's It All About, Alfie?" Why? Well, first there's jazz quintet-owning Brooklyn trumpeter Denzel Washington. When he's not playing he's practicing, which utterly frustrates the two women who adore him — modest, devoted Joie Lee and beautiful aspiring singer Cynda Williams. Oh, then the movie's about a love triangle? No, this part simply shows Washington's incapability of feeling any deep emotion beyond his music. Then is it about jazz musicians? Not really, because although their behind-the-scenes banter is funny and their music eminently listenable, knowledge of them remains fragmented. And although producer/writer/director Spike Lee's just fine as the band's compulsive baseball-betting manager, the role does little to clarify the film's obscure focus. Maybe next time Lee should concentrate solely on directing, because this way obviously ain't the one to make a mo' better movie. (Kabuki, SF; Fine Arts, Berk.; Century, Oakl.)

PANDORA REVISITED

THE DANCE Brigade has never been shy about opening a Pandora's box of political, social and moral issues. In its new work, appropriately named Pandora The Myth, the group once again attacks them all: colonialism, oppression, racism, the religious right, addiction, the destruction of the environment. But if previous shows are any indication, they will once again do so with humor, a great sense of theater and an infectious lack of self-aggrandizement.

Pandora basically got a bum rap — at least that's what Dance Brigade's co-artistic director Krissy Keefer thinks. In the most ancient version, she explains, "Pandora is a creation myth in which she is described as an earth mother from whose womb, that is the box, the world springs. It's only after Hesiod, the male chronicler, that she became responsible for all the bad things on earth. Just like in the Adam and Eve version, woman at that point became the punishment for all men."

As you might expect from this group of six brave guerrillas, the Dance Brigade is out to set history straight, and also to give us the contemporary myths that still dominate women's lives. Expect to see a whole set of new characters, such as a virgin of Guadalupe, five highly pregnant women who give birth to the universe, snake-haired gorgons with a live reptile and what surely will be a favorite, a "Tammy Baker-Mary Kay" Pandorable, who is obsessed by her looks and who "aerobicizes through Jesus."

Pandora was created and directed by Keefer and co-director Nina Fichter, and the basic script was developed by Geraldine Barre, sister of the National Anthem singer who caused such a fuss. Pandora the Myth plays Fri/17-Sat/18 at 8 pm, and Sun/19 at 2 and 8 pm at Laney College, 900 Fallon, Oakl. Call 465-3686 for tickets.

THE SOUNDS OF RILEY

THE NOTION of hearing modern composer Terry Riley playing in a quintet in a jazz nightclub tests the imagination, but that is a big part of what Riley's band, Khayal, is all about. The keyboardist is best known for such works as his 1964 opus, In C, 1969's Rainbow in Curved Air (often cited as classic example of early minimalism) and the recent Salome Dances for Peace (recorded magnificently by Kronos Quartet). But his companions in this current work are well-known figures in the Bay Area jazz world — vocalist Molly Holm, bassist Bill Douglass, drummer George Marsh and saxophonist George Brooks. "I've been doing work like this for about ten years with various people, mainly George Brooks and (North Indian sitar and tabla player) Krishna Bhatt," Riley says. But it was last January's 25th anniversary concert of In C at Life on the Water, which included George Marsh and Bill Douglass among many others, that may have set the present project in motion. "In a sense it was coming back together with musicians I had worked with over the years."

If you can conjure up the image of a fluid melding of concepts from the jazz realm of improvisation, various "new music" idioms and the Indian classical tradition, you might have some idea of what Khayal sounds like. Probably not.

Earlier this year, the band made its debut in New York City. A tape of the concert reveals music that flows like a stream fed by experiences as diverse as Riley playing jazz piano in a big band 30 years ago (with Bill Douglass and reed player Mel Martin), and his singing Indian classical music for the past two decades under the guidance of master Pandit Pran Nath. According to Riley, "Khayal" has two meanings. One is "imagination." "The other is the intermediary world between the real world and the dream world," he explains, "it's the way to cross into the dream world." Khayal crosses over into a musical world of its own device, Sunday, August 19th, at Yoshi's, 6030 Claremont in Oakland. Call 652-9200 for ticket information.

SAMPLINGS

Gene Harris bangs the ivories on the outskirts of town this weekend.

Jazz in the 'burbs

Twenty-two years ago, Concord, California had a hard time getting anybody to acknowledge its existence, let alone take the placid "bedroom community" seriously. You might go there from neighboring Pleasant Hill or Walnut Creek to buy a car, but the sleepy suburban town hardly fit into anybody's cultural plans. Ironically, in addition to the demographic pressures of the burgeoning Diablo Valley, it was an auto dealer, Carl Jefferson, who had a lot to do with putting Concord on the music calendar. The founder of Concord Records, a bastion of mainstream acoustic jazz, helped put on the first Concord Jazz Festivals there; they were probably a welcome close-to-home diversion for parents of kids who were riding into San Francisco to cruise the Haight or hear Blue Cheer at the Avalon Ballroom. Eventually, the community built its "pavilion," a cantilevered architectural and acoustical conundrum that has gradually evolved into one of the more pleasant of the large outdoor music venues. Concord itself has become a developer's dream, with towering Bank of America buildings dominating downtown and condos and upscale housing developments blanketing the once rural countryside. And the Concord Jazz Festival long ago assumed international proportions, escaping its early parameters as a Concord Records vanity production and attracting both the biggest names in mainstream swing and bebop and a coterie of corporate sponsors.

The entire jazz festival circuit has become awfully routine and predictable in recent years — many of the same players packaged up by promoters and sent around the globe to play the same licks on the same tunes. But it at least has made the music, a longtime commercial black sheep, consistently available to its audience. The 22nd Annual Concord Jazz Festival — running through this weekend with downtown weekday concerts in Todos Santos Plaza, a photography exhibit of "The Jazz Image" and "Happy Hour Jazz" at the Concord Sheraton, a Saturday afternoon Turk Murphy Memorial Concert in Todos Santos Plaza and three major Pavilion shows — is one of those comfortably reliable bills. There's nothing to inspire ecstatic anticipation, but everything should be fine and mellow.

Velvet-voiced Mel Torme headlines the Friday night concert, and for all his celebrity and seemingly middle-of-the-road style, the man performs deceptively simple-sounding magic. Preceding Torme is a promising Count Basie-inspired big band, co-led by Frank Wess (tenor sax and flute) and trumpeter Harry "Sweets" Edison and featuring pianist Gerald Wiggins, saxophonists Billy Mitchell and Marshal Royal, trombonist Al Grey, trumpeter Joe Newman and others. Canadian trombonist Rob McConnell opens the show with his quintet, including the elegant guitarist Ed Bickert.

On Saturday, the 6:30 pm show is an All-Star Jam, with many of the previous night's musicians, anchored by pianist Gene Harris and capped by sensuous vocalist Ernestine Anderson. Harris has garnered worldwide attention for his rousing 1988 Concord Jazz big band recording, Tribute to Count Basie, and is becoming one of the surprise stars of the jazz mainstream. At 9:30 pm, Mercer Ellington conducts the current version of his late father's institution, the Duke Ellington Orchestra, for a special "Starlight Dance."

Previous Concord Jazz Festivals included a JVC-sponsored show of jazz-fusion and pop-crossover artists, but several years ago the two events were separated. This year's sixth annual JVC festival takes place at the Pavilion on Saturday, August 25th at 2 pm, and features saxophonist Grover Washington, Jr., guitarists Lee Ritenour and Stanley Jordan, the Zawinul Syndicate, keyboardist David Benoit and Latin percussionist Pancho Sanchez. The Concord Pavilion is at 2000 Kirker Pass Road. Call 762-2277 for information.

Not so modern anymore

The Simpsons opened up for the Jack Rubies, who in turn opened up for Modern English. Bart was great. It was around 9 pm on Sunday, August 5th, and just when we thought that the management at Sim's was going to treat the audience to the Fox Network's In Living Colour on the big screen, the Jack Rubies took the stage. The Rubies are one of those English guitar bands that have followed in the wake of such seminal post-punk pop groups like The Jam, bringing to these shores a cool stage demeanor, catchy college radio fodder and, more often than not, great thrift shop chic.

Unfortunately, the Jack Rubies sound too much like all the other English guitar bands gracing "alternative" or college radio station playlists. A quick glance at their press release could explain why: See the Money in My Smile, the band's latest album, was produced by Pat Collier, "the British guru of post-punk guitar frenzy." Collier's resume reads like the Live 105 playlist: House of Love, the Wonder Stuff, etcetera, etcetera.

As with all jangly guitar bands, a few gems in the Rubies' repertoire did stand out. The folksy "Boat Rock," introduced as a new song, won immediate audience approval; "Lost in the Crowd" injected harmonica into the band's sound, which made a nice diversion from the problem that plagues this type of band: In vocals, they're often indistinguishable from the next group of British guitar players coming down the pike. Even on the raunchy "Swamp Snake," lead singer Ian Wright's attempted husky growl couldn't impress the audience.

Like all supporting bands, the Rubies had to deal with performing in and around the headliner's equipment, but they rose above that obstacle, looking far livelier on the stage than their vocalists sounded.

Headliners Modern English, however, performing on the heels of a newly released compilation of their '80s repertoire, could not rise above the mediocrity of their songwriting, the "gee whizz"-with-an-English-accent personality of lead singer Robbie Grey or the fact that, yes, they too were produced by Pat Collier, "the British guru of blah, blah, blah."

While the Jack Rubies looked and acted like a band on stage, Modern English looked and acted like session musicians. The performance had that play-by-rote feel to it, and Grey had an annoying stage banter that could only be described as cute if he were a precocious 10-year-old.

Musically, Modern English is pleasant pop, their records full of inoffensive ditties that fill the space between possible hit singles groomed to perfection. "I Care About You" could have been a simple love song if Grey hadn't put so much emotion in the lyric, "you are the concentration of my better thoughts." You could almost envision the band in conference, trying to carve meaning into this three-minute sigh. Modern English played for an hour, finishing up with the ever-popular "I Melt with You," a piece of clever fluff they re-released just in time for prom night or graduation. Like a majority of the audience, I think I came to see and hear this memory, and like a majority of the audience, I left before the encore.

Doo-wop Delights

Scanning the FM dial late on a Friday night, you might be surprised to hear the inspirational vocal harmonizing of '50s and '60s R&B and soul. And unless your musical memory goes back those couple of decades, or you take an interest in the history of 20th-century American pop music, you've probably never heard the songs or even heard of the musicians before.

So what kind of radio program are you hearing? Is this some ghost transmission from the early '50s? Not quite. This is Doo-wop Delights, a weekly show of vocal music on KPFA radio (94.1 FM), happening every Friday evening (except the last one of every month) from 11:30 pm to 1:30 am.

After the initial surprise of hearing post-war gospel and early R&B and soul on the same radio that usually spits out top 40 blockbusters, the proper English accent of host Opal Nations takes control. But don't let that Rod Serling voice send you spinning away to the FM dial's upper echelon. Nations is sincere — and passionate — about keeping the music of these neglected vocal groups alive: bands like The Diablos, The Gladiolas, The Swallows and The Orioles, significant contributors to '50s and '60s vocal music, whose influence can be felt even today.

Nations says that, because of the law of supply and demand, many of these bands have slipped into relative obscurity. The record industry doesn't see much interest in early soul and R&B, even though about 20,000 vocal groups recorded in the '50s. This means there are increasingly fewer opportunities to hear this kind of music today.

That's what makes Doo-wop Delights so unique. This month, highlights include the best of Original Sound Records on August 17th, which features Art Laboe's LA-based R&B label, and the Meditation Singers Special, a hot female gospel group from Detroit, on August 24th.

"A modern medieval death-folk unit": John Loose, Susan Maunu and Mitzi Johnson of the Blue Rubies.

THROUGH THE RENAISSANCE DARKLY

The Blue Rubies combine dark tones, meticulous musicianship and modern sensibility for a fresh approach to lute music

By Derk Richardson

IT IS four in the morning in Oaxaca, Mexico, and most of the celebrants have retired from the Day of the Dead festivities. But in the middle of the town square, two gringas are singing the Velvet Underground's "I'll Be Your Mirror" a cappella. "We had just learned the song and heard that Nico had died," explains Mitzi Johnson. The scores of federates standing around the square didn't realize it, but they were witnessing one of the earliest live performances of San Francisco's Blue Rubies. "We thought for sure we were going to get arrested," Johnson remembers. "But when we finished, all the soldiers started clapping. I hope Nico was nearby somewhere. I hope she got a kick out of it."

The sepulchral images of the story are apt for the Blue Rubies' music as well. The band — Mitzi Johnson, Susan Maunu and John Loose — has been together for well over a year, staking out its own musical territory in the valley of the shadow of death. The repertoire rises up like an expanding mist from a crypt, containing such cover versions as The Clash's "Somebody Got Murdered," Curtis Mayfield's "Freddie's Dead," Bruce Springsteen's "State Trooper" and Prince's "When You Were Mine."

What makes the Blue Rubies the most intriguing new Bay Area band in recent years is its unique presentation of such material. Maunu and Johnson sing the lyrics, often in vibrato-free tones influenced by Bulgarian and European early music styles; Johnson plays the lute, a 14-stringed, guitar-like instrument dating from the 14th century; Loose taps out rhythms and colors on a panoply of percussion instruments from around the world, occasionally adding wordless harmonic singing akin to the chants of Tibetan monks. The results are unabashedly gorgeous, even if the moods are foreboding. "Some bands are so afraid of beauty, as if it's politically incorrect to have it in the music," argues Johnson, who also makes music with the electro-industrial band/project Rhythm and Noise, which, she grants, "is about as far removed from the Blue Rubies as you can get. There's definitely a place for music that is hard and jarring, but I also think really incredible beauty can be achieved with certain timbres, and that it's really important to keep that alive in the world. It's a real balm. But as far as our content goes, we are very much a product of our time, we're not trying to disappear into some lovely fairy castle. We sing about things that matter to us, and the world's a pretty scary place."

With their combination of often gloomy lyrics and intensely meticulous musicianship rooted in a demanding tradition, the Blue Rubies are a rarity in the pop music world — something genuinely new. The way many critics heard it, the trio's version of "When You Were Mine" was the highlight of last year's Windham Hill sampler, Legacy: A Collection of New Folk Music. But the Rubies are impossible to pin down in any particular setting. "People tend to call us 'new folk' because we play these acoustic instruments," Johnson acknowledges, "but I think we have a stronger connection to the lute song. And I relate more to hip-hop and industrial music. A lot of folk music has a pretty limited palette of chords. We're all really interested in timbre and tone. I just think timbre is king, it's the most potent form of communication and stimulation that we as humans can absorb."

The band's somber tones, complex textures and frequent focus on the bleaker side of human existence has led Naut Humon, of Rhythm and Noise, to dub the Blue Rubies "a modern medieval death-folk unit."

"We're not the airy-fairy 'rows and flows of angel hair' kind of folk thing," Johnson explains. "We have an edge to what we sing about. There's a dark quality to Renaissance music and yet there's something oddly uplifting about it. I think there's a cathartic quality to mournful music. It makes me feel better when I listen to it, and I've always believed that if the music you're playing affects you in a certain way, it's bound to affect somebody else in that way. And that's the only way I've ever been able to approach making music."

The Blue Rubies were conceived when Johnson decided to dust off her lute, on which she had been classically trained, and "bring it into the present." Born in New Jersey and a graduate of the Eastman School of Music, she had been playing synthesizer in a variety of punk and post-punk rock bands, and singing both casually and seriously with Susan Maunu since moving to California in 1976. "When I got the Marianne Faithfull record, Strange Weather," she says, "I listened to the title cut by An aesthetic of obscurity: Lee Ranaldo, Steve Shelley, Thurston Moore and Kim Gordon of Sonic Youth.

SUPERSONIC ROCKERS

The success of Sonic Youth's newest album may set the tone for the music industry's dealings with rock'n'roll's fringe bands

By Gina Arnold

MOST ROCK'N'ROLL bands — especially the ones that still have the temerity to use electric guitars — are easily divided into one of two categories: great live bands, or great recording acts. It used to be that talent in either category could suffice for superstardom: In the '70s, the Allman Brothers and Peter Dinklage hewed whole careers out of monster-hit live albums. But these days, unless you're the Grateful Dead, it's definitely better

Though market forces still require most bands to tour, late '80s developments in technology, as well as the popularity of MTV, have placed live bands at a grave commercial disadvantage. For one thing, it's often difficult to put down on tape the winning aspects of their shows; but also, if they're not photogenic, or if they play music that doesn't easily fit into radio formats, no amount of promotion is going to shoot them up the charts.

That's one reason that so much is riding on the success of Sonic Youth, an intense and nearly imageless quartet of avant-garde New Yorkers that, though the four are purveyors of exciting guitar rock, is hampered by all three of the aforementioned difficulties. Because of the band's dense, sometimes dissonant music — hardly radio friendly — and even denser noisy shows, Sonic Youth's sound is difficult for a regular rock fan to grasp.

Though for five years one of the leading underground/college radio acts in the country, Sonic Youth is currently a recording industry flagship (or "experiment," as guitarist Thurston Moore calls it) for testing the depths (or shallows) of a '90s audience's patience. So if the band can succeed in projecting its difficult meter to the masses, it will be a rousing victory for a type of band that, as Moore puts it, "is part of a new tradition of bands that never had much promise of being perfect. You know, for people who are more into spontaneity and atmosphere and stuff."

Anyone familiar, not just with Sonic Youth but with the entire '80s American independent scene — and the two things walk hand-in-hand — can recognize the truth in Moore's words: There is something beyond the chirpy pop-songwriting skills of '60s bands like the Beatles and the long-winded metal-improv of '70s avant-garde acts. It is something a bit intellectual, something kind of momentary, something occasionally sublime. It is also often noisy and harsh, a clash of metal and wire and electricity, and it takes some getting used to. (In creating these effects, Sonic Youth's guitarists Thurston Moore and Lee Ranaldo use up to 18 pre-tuned guitars... each.)

But one wonders if, looking back, fans of this hip music will be reduced to telling their sneering children, "well, you kinda had to be there." Minus their place in history and the immediacy of the live act, will the brilliance of bands like the Butthole Surfers, the Meat Puppets, the Minutemen and Sonic Youth translate to future generations?

It's an interesting question, because at least part of the charm of these bands — Sonic Youth in particular — is in having heard them develop. It is a whole other pop aesthetic than the one commercial rock'n'roll generally panders to: an aesthetic of obscurity,

Will the brilliance of bands like the Butthole Surfers, the Meat Puppets, the Minutemen and Sonic Youth translate to future generations?

the sound of scratchy live tapes and poor recordings — what Moore terms "music that's really room-activated."

"I think that what our audience sees in us," Moore says thoughtfully, "is that we're aware of our surroundings. We look and act like people who don't play music. We're not aloof from the audience because we're always in it."

This, Moore points out, has always been the lure of punk rock: the idea that there was no distance between stage and performer. But Sonic Youth is no mere punk band — at least not since they stopped doing "I killed Robert Christgau with my big fucking dick," a childish rant against the Village Voice rock critic's negative review of their music years ago. They are, instead, a rather sophisticated art-rock band, one that uses odd tunings and kitchen implements banged on electric guitar strings to create what Moore alternately refers to as "intuitive, unconscious guitar rock that's almost secretive in its details," and is (he hopes) "more of a pop-rock thing, not for experimental reasons, but because that's what we're into."

Certainly the band's highly touted new LP, Goo, and its single, "Kool Thing," are more of a "pop-rock thing" — friendlier and funnier than the gothically dense guitar swirlings of previous LPs like EVOL, Sister or the critically revered Daydream Nation. Novelist Stephen Erickson, writing in the L.A. Weekly, recently called Goo "resolutely without glamour or sentiment." But "melodrama," he added, "is another matter."

Easily the band's toughest and most accessible album to date, Goo combines the band's deep, burbling guitar swirl with both a newfound pop tunefulness and a lyrical intent that's less obviously superficial than before. Instead of simply exposing their interest in various sinister pop icons — Charles Manson, Karen Carpenter, Madonna — and wrapping that interest in a thick haze of hipness, the band members seem to have finally found something sympathetic to say about them. At least they have on two standout songs, "Tunic" and "Kool Thing": The former is a touching monologue about heaven from Karen Carpenter, who tells her brother Richard, "I feel like I'm disappearing, getting smaller every day/but when I open my mouth to sing/I get bigger in every way"; the latter is a rock fan's description of what she believes her icon will do for the world once he becomes a star: "And I just want you to know," she adds meaningfully, "we can still be friends."

As these snippets indicate, Sonic Youth's interests lie on the urban side

Postmodern artists explore the use of words in paintings

By Harry Roche

SINCE THE days of cubism, artists have routinely shattered the visible world into smithereens, spun the disjointed shards every which way, then reassembled them into novel configurations in their own works. Sheathed in ambiguity, postmodernism's palimpsest of fragmented images and elliptical references (to previous art) must seem like a crazy quilt of Rorschach inkblots to the casual viewer. While postmodernism's practitioners may well attach specific meanings to their work, it is precisely this open-ended ambiguity that yields any number of possible interpretations.

Upon stepping into "The Painted Word," currently at the Richmond Art Center, you know you've struck postmodern paydirt. Curator Michael Schwager has assembled an eccentric potpourri from a quirky aggregate of postmodernists: Jamie Brunson, Squeak Carnwath, Wally Hedrick, Evelyn Lam, Ingrid Muan, Ed Ruscha, Darryl Sapien and Al Souza. What links this disparate group together is that each artist's creation juxtaposes words and images.

The 28 sheetrock panels in Ingrid Muan's The Illustration of Interims (of Imperatives) stretches across an entire wall, an alphabet soup of letters and word fragments floating atop variegated grounds. Though radically cropped, each section resembles a truncated road sign that imparts ambiguous information — e.g. "NO EXIT" and "MUST TURN".

Like most of the artists in "The Painted Word," Muan operates from inside a sort of stylistic no-man's land that refuses to acknowledge clearly defined and thus limiting boundaries.

And although you might not guess it (several semesters in post-graduate seminars, or at least a subscription to Artforum, helps a lot), Muan is basically grappling with the issues raised by a branch of linguistics known as hermeneutics or semiotics, disciplines that examine the tenuous relationship between signifiers (a man nailed to a pair of crossed beams) and what's signified (Christ dying for our sins). Once you wade through the pedantic prattle, what they are saying is this: Any one reading of a "text" (be it a painting, book, facial expression or an article of clothing) is an arbitrary one at best. Although fundamentalist Christians might take umbrage, even the Bible is a kind of tabula rasa open to multiple interpretations.

This idea is succinctly illustrated in yet another "page" from Muan's "text." A sign with a pair of stylized, medieval-looking letters reads "st." Viewer A might think to himself "street." Viewer B, however, notices that the "t" is shaped like a cross. This sign symbolizes "saint" to him. And it might hold yet a third meaning for viewer C.

Muan's The Illustration of Interims (of Imperatives) might be grist for a doctoral dissertation, but her True Pictures goes back to basics. Ironically titled, its 88 schematic ink drawings look like the pictures in a second grade primer, conveying unambiguous concepts for a hodgepodge of commonplace objects — everything from a Greek citizen and an oboe to a fez and an oxygen mask. It is a telling statement on how many of our conceptions and misconceptions were formed in early childhood, and how these elementary schemas have the capacity to remain indelibly etched in our memory well into adulthood, whether we like it or not.

While True Pictures harkens back to childhood, Evelyn Lam's haunting works are like painted tombstones with personal epitaphs/epithets inscribed across somber voids. Looking at Memory is like peering into Lam's dream state: Evocative painted words ("not caring," "loving") are like semi-conscious ruminations dissolving inside a depressing green mist.

Of the mixed-media grab bag in

"The Painted Word," the jousting of words and imagery is evenly matched only in Jamie Brunson's streamlined assemblages (which incorporate things like fossilized bras and briefs). Stripped to its essentials, Brunson's postmodern polyptych of six monochromatic panels, Deluge, features an identical Charles Atlas-type figure flexing in the middle. Deluge might be subtitled the Precious Bodily Fluids Series because each panel's single hue corresponds to a single word: "blood" (red), "semen" (white), "urine" (yellow), "tears" (blue) and "bile" (green). Yet what if Brunson chose to name countries instead of fluids: red for Russia, green for Greenland, white for Iceland and so on? Her point is that context affects content; each component subtly and not so subtly shapes the others.

The show's remaining four artists are represented, for the most part, by larger-scale works in which more of the "real" world enters into the picture while the artists toy with many of the same issues as Muan, Lam and Brunson. Ed Ruscha's Something or Other, for instance, features a panorama done in a quasi-photorealist style, with the phrase "Something or Other" enveloping the scene. Its striking image and grisaille palette are reminiscent of both a daytime soap and a Nazi propaganda film (A Triumph of the Will in particular, where Hitler swoops down from a crepuscular sky like a god descending from the heavens).

"The Painted Word" is a brain-teaser from start to finish. Those who like intellectual challenges — working puzzles, solving riddles, translating languages and deciphering codes — will find more than enough to keep them happily stumped — er, engaged. ■

"The Painted Word" continues through Sept. 2nd at the Richmond Art Center, Civic Center Plaza, Richmond. 620-6772. Hours: Tues.-Fri., 10am-4:30 pm; Sat.-Sun., noon-4:30 pm. Free.

CIRCUS SYNTHESIS

Montreal's Cirque du Soleil mixes entertainment styles in its splashy extravaganza CIRQUE DU SOLEIL. At Fourth and King streets near China Basin, SF, through Aug. 19th. Also at Retail Pavilion Parking Lot, San Fernando and Second St., San Jose, from Sept. 11th through the 23rd.

By Misha Berson

MANY PEOPLE dream about being able to fly, but Vladimir Kekhaial takes off nightly. The Russian circus artist is more than a hunk: With his flowing mane of jet-black hair and perfectly sculpted body, he's Samson unbound.

He prowls the Cirque du Soleil stage with panther-like grace, wraps a pair of hanging elastic straps around his wrists and voila! On his own bare (and I do mean bare) muscle power and with the undistracting help of several men pulling on the other end of his straps he lifts into the air to curve and soar above the audience, a circus Icarus. After returning to earth, he slinks toward a wall of smoke and just disappears — dissolving back, perhaps, into some other dimension.

Kekhaial's poetic flight is literally the high point of "Nouvelle Experience," the latest edition of Cirque du Soleil. This Montreal-based company still knows how to razzle and dazzle better than just about any circus around. As in its previous two visits, the imaginative lighting effects, splashy costumes, electric music and overall mise en scene remain surprising and sublime throughout. But the best pieces of this glossy puzzle are the moments when the artists' physical prowess matches all the aesthetic embellishments.

While many of the beguiling performers of last year's Cirque show are nowhere to be seen, artists from Canada, the Soviet Union, China and the United States fill in the gaps with classy new acts. Director Franco Dragone, production designer Michel Crete and costumer Dominique Lemieux have given the whole shebang a look that's more sleekly postmodern than ever. In fact, if the show has a theme, it's the happy coexistence of many forms and epochs of popular entertainment. Medieval clowning rubs elbows with American silent film comedy, French froufrou meets Conan the Barbarian comic art and hard-driving rock riffs trade off with haunting cello cadenzas.

The characters who guide the show along are a fancifully diverse lot, too. There's David Shiner, a baggy-pants New Vaudevillian, sharing the entry ramp with pixilated cluster of flouzes (street urchins) who look like animated gargoyles, and a hefty ringmistress (Frances Labonte) with a gigante two-pronged red hairdo and a mighty cackle presiding over "La Corporation," a regiment of musicians and acrobats garbed in sleek blue soldier suits (they could pass for Prince Charming's shock troops). Every now and then, a flock of karate-chopping, yellow-beaked creatures join in the zany, cross-species party.

Head clown duties are handled by the silent but hyperactive Shiner. He starts off with some so-so eccentric dancing and eager-to-please hat tricks, but soon enough unleashes his own specialty: messing with the audience. In a hilarious stretch of opening-night mayhem, Shiner ran roughshod over the ring-side crowd. Naughty and unrepentant, he purloined someone's raincoat and made like he was a flasher, fluffed up women's hairdos, tossed around an expensive camera while the owner watched helplessly, pulled out a handkerchief to polish some poor guy's bald pate and cavorted with a tow-headed child. Later he recruited several "volunteers" and proceeded to browbeat them through a silent movie sketch. Shine may look like Harold Lloyd, but he's got a big streak of Don Rickles in him. A splendid mime, he's a great tease without ever resorting to verbal insult.

Next to Vladimir Kekhaial's orbiting, the most effective displays of skill are the stark, lovely trapeze act by Anne Lepage, Vassily Demenchoukova's ability to hold a lit birthday cake aloft while perching on a tower of eight chairs and the astonishing body-pretzling contortions of four adolescent girls with rubber bands for spines. Equally memorable is Wang Hong's foot-juggling: In the time-honored Chinese tradition, Hong keeps an open parasol whirling in the air by balancing its paper-thin circumference on her soles. Don't ask me how.

It was a shame to miss Les Fous Volants (The Flying Fools), a prize-winning French trapeze contingent that was mentioned in the program, but did not perform opening night. The show could have used another breathtaking feat: The acrobatic and tightrope routines looked a tad shaky, and the trampoline tricks are paced more for humor than excitement. There's also room for a splashier finale — I missed the gang's-all-here pizzazz of last year's mass bicycle-riding climax.

But enough grouching. Cirque du Soleil packs so much into one evening that a few less-than-awesome moments can be easily tolerated. Nouvelle Experience is shot through with sophisticated magic. It's a thoroughly modern evocation of circus present that nods sleekly and affectionately to circus past.

"Preppy girls mature socially much later than others do": Carolyn Farina in Metropolitan.

A FORMAL AFFAIR

Director Whit Stillman debuts with a comedy about debutantes

METROPOLITAN. Directed by Whit Stillman. At the Kabuki, SF.

By Steve Warren

WITH HIS first feature, Metropolitan, Whit Stillman emerges as the screen equivalent of playwright A.R. Gurney (Love Letters), and maybe even the WASP Woody Allen, although one of his characters proposes replacing such terms as WASP and preppy with UHB — for Urban Haute Bourgeoisie.

Metropolitan is set "not so long ago" in Manhattan's rapidly vanishing debutante scene. I suppose the wealthy need something to do with their money besides paying repeat visits to Les Misérables to see how the other 95 percent live.

This is one of those movies — American Graffiti is the classic example — with an ensemble cast of relative unknowns who show great potential in a sublime showcase. In Stillman's honor I hereby dub them "The Whit Pack."

It's the Christmas holidays and the members of SFRP — Sally Fowler's Rat Pack — are home from their prep schools and colleges. There's an "escort shortage," and even though there's not much romantic involvement among these pals, they try to maintain gender parity at their social functions, including before and after parties before and after the formal affairs at the Plaza, Waldorf and other hotels.

So they recruit another male, Tom Townsend (Edward Clements, a red-haired Michael J. Fox), who turns out to be not exactly their sort. For one thing he's a "Westsider" who admits, "My resources are limited." What's more, as "a committed socialist," he's morally opposed to the debutante scene — he was only out on this particular night to see what it is he's opposed to.

Two members of the group take a strong liking to Tom: Audrey (the Molly Ringwald-ish Carolyn Farina), for whom he could become a first love ("Preppy girls mature socially much later than others do"), and Nick (Christopher Eigeman), a veritable leader of the group who in many ways feels like an outsider. Bespectacled Charlie (Taylor Nichols, a nerdier Judd Nelson), who has a crush on Audrey, dislikes Tom instinctively when he senses competition. Sally (Dylan Hundley), Jane (Allison Rutledge-Parisi) and slut-tish Cynthia (Isabel Gillies) are neutral, but willing to accept Tom for Audrey's sake; Fred (Bryan Leder) is usually too drunk to care.

While Charlie fears "downward social mobility," Nick relishes it. He's already mastered the art of freeloading so he can survive, and is amusedly enjoying the clichés of his class while they last.

All these people combined show about as much emotion as Ed Sullivan, but a couple of peripheral characters add passion to the mix. Womanizing Rick Von Sloneker (Will Kempe) is from decadent Southampton, and beautiful Serena (Elizabeth Thompson) has been known to keep 20 boys on a string at once, including Tom and Rick.

A "truth game" at a party suggests Metropolitan is going the way of The Boys in the Band in the second act, but Stillman skillfully steers us past that sequence into more good stuff. The climax again ventures into cliché country, but once more he sidesteps to keep it as fresh as possible.

Like most minorities, the debutante set proves less than homogeneous when you probe beneath the surface; and Stillman, the best new director of the year so far, does probing that merits approbation.

From the son of a wealthy lawyer/politician to an independent filmmaker who won't discuss the budget of his first feature "so as not to distract the audience," Whit Stillman would seem to be a study in extremes, but he says he's been down even lower. "The lowest I sank was when I was in independent film sales. The people you meet — well, they're good people but they do such sleazy things."

After graduating from Harvard in 1973, Stillman got his first job with the Village Voice. He wrote fiction in addition to his journalistic pursuits through the '70s. In 1980 he went to Spain, and returned with a wife and a job representing Spanish filmmakers. A few years later, the death of an uncle left him running an agency that handled cartoonists and illustrators. He started writing the script for Metropolitan at Cannes during the 1985 film festival and worked on it at night for more than three years.

Stillman gives two clues to what he spent on Metropolitan. "I figured it out," he says. "You could make 300 of my films for the cost of Total Recall." He adds that he hopes to move up and make his next picture "à la Steven Soderbergh (sex, lies, and videotape) — about $1.2 million."

It was during his formative years that Stillman scaled down his lifestyle. He grew up in Manhattan and Cornwall-on-Hudson, New York, but his family lived in Washington during democratic administrations. It must have been in the latter part of the LBJ years that he went to a D.C. boarding school he describes as full of "democratic kids who were ashamed of being rich and competed to see who could act the most poor."

Fortunately, he says, he transferred to a school in upstate New York where "eccentrics were the heroes," as were the people who cared for the animals in the school zoo. His mother had bought him clothes at a K-Mart-type store, and on his first day at the school, he says, "This guy came into my room and went through my closet looking at labels. He made fun of my cheap clothes, but in a good-natured way... There was this funny conformism-nonconformism thing going on there that changed my outlook."

In tracing the autobiographical roots of Metropolitan, Stillman claims he was most like Tom, the audience's "point of entry" into the social world of the debs and their escorts. "My being 'outside' was more of a mental construct. There were also parts of Audrey, Charlie and Nick in me. My aspirations were to be more like Nick, but I could never be that clever." His admiration for Nick led to some script problems, he admits: "The most compelling character disappears two-thirds of the way through."

'The lowest I sank was when I was in independent film sales. The people you meet — they're good people but they do such sleazy things.'

The debutante scene still exists in New York, San Francisco and other cities, Stillman says. "It's been winding down since it was invented — in the 1880s and '90s. It has a half-life. Every decade it doesn't quite disappear... It's a total anachronism. It's no longer important, so it no longer has the obnoxious social quality it did have. Now it has the charm of a costume party."

He started trying to document that scene in college when he "went through an F. Scott Fitzgerald phase," but found he couldn't write about it at the time. It became easier a decade or so later, because "I had nothing to do with that world — or the adult version of that world — since 1974, so I had distance on that scene."

Despite that distance, Stillman defends the upper class against the definition that they're people who don't pay taxes but sleep indoors. The characters in Metropolitan, he says, have grown up with "the memory of money in their families. They would be very moralistic about paying their taxes... The people who become the most eccentric are those from the very richest families." What he refers to as "normal" rich people work for a living, he insists. They are "always prosperous," but never rich.

The year isn't specified in Metropolitan. "I wanted to give the impression of a generic past," Stillman says, "somewhere between 1965 and the recent past." He couldn't afford to rent a lot of old cars to dress the set, he says, but he hired some Checker cabs and found, when shooting exteriors in Manhattan, that the only cars people leave on the street at night are old ones. Locations such as the Tweed Courthouse lent elegance at little or no cost.

With the exception of Will Kempe, Stillman's ten principal actors are all making their film debuts in Metropolitan. He estimates their actual ages at 18 to 28, but says he suspects "one might be a ringer." Taylor Nichols, who plays Charlie, "was the only one who laughed at some of the anachronistic jokes," such as one about the 1962 song "Duke of Earl" that was cut from the film.

While he wishes them all success in their acting careers, Stillman has been hoping it wouldn't come too quickly in one case: "The actress who plays Audrey (Carolyn Farina) still works behind a sales counter in Macy's," he confides. "I told her that will make a good Daily News human interest story — don't quit yet!"

Tom Waits and I thought, 'This is a lute song.' There's a huge body of music for lute and voice from the Renaissance and this was a lute song. I got the instrument out and the chords just fell into my hands."

Maunu, who was born in Wyoming but spent her teen years in Terra Linda, formed the Blue Rubies with Johnson in early 1988. They performed duo shows for about a year and put out feelers for a percussionist. Through Maunu's brother, Peter (notable for his guitar work with Mark Isham and in the Arsenio Hall show band), they found Loose, a member of the Early Music Ensemble who had been looking for a good reason to move out of New York. In addition to his rare harmonic singing — which he taught himself as child — Loose brings all sorts of Indian, Chinese, Irish and other instruments into the Blue Rubies.

Initially, the band poured its creative energies into shaping the music around the thoughts of others. "I have a little bit of trouble with this whole singer-songwriter thing that says if you're going to sing a song, you have to have written the words to make it an exact reflection of what's in your psyche," Johnson explains. As well as recasting borrowed tunes, such as Lennon and McCartney's "You've Got to Hide Your Love Away" and Nina Simone's "She Had Fodder on her Wings," the Rubies took the novel step of putting original music to the words of such poets as Dorothy Parker and Rimbaud.

A demo tape has been completed and is being considered by interested record companies. To bring even more dimensions to the music, a few special guests were brought in — keyboardist Art Lande (playing accordion), electric guitarist David Torn and "processed" trombone player J.A. Deane. "But we want all our songs to stand up as trio," Johnson explains. "One of my favorite bands is Ensemble Alcatraz. They'll have only their soprano and the medieval fiddle, and the sound is so full and so complete, the timbre so rich. It's good for us to go back to sounds like that. You're reminded that with a very simple musical foil for vocals you can have a very emotional sound. We never want to be one of these overproduced folkie bands who are too afraid to say, 'I have my guitar and I sing and this sound works.'" of trash/pop culture: There's a very indoor/nighttime aesthetic to most of their work. Moore cites Andy Warhol as an influence. "The video [of "Kool Thing," currently in rotation on MTV] definitely nodded to him, or at least to his vision of New York as a dirty, scummy city covered in silver wallpaper."

This is interesting because, although Sonic Youth is one of the few '80s bands that musically doesn't owe a great deal to the Velvet Underground, there are some intriguing parallels. What, for instance, does their endorsement of artists like Raymond Pettibon (who did the cover to Go), filmmakers like Richard Kern and poets like Lydia Lunch point toward if not some kind of lower-rent '80s Factory in microcosm? (Moore, however, reduces the band's connections to Warhol as being based on "geography, [there are] two visual artists in the band... and Kim has a pair of go-go boots which he signed.")

Although Sonic Youth is still the last word in New York City art rock, a band whose music and vision rarely, if ever, pokes its head out of the East Village, it is only because its members are in fact refugees from America's suburbs, deliberately disenfranchised (or just disgusted) by the mainstream. Moore grew up in central Jersey, an hour and a half away from Manhattan. In high school he listened to Led Zeppelin and Deep Purple; he bought early issues of the magazines Creem and Rock Scene and, he recalls, "was really attracted to Iggy Pop just from reading about him — I bought Raw Power the day it came out. This was when everyone else I knew was into Yes and the Allman Brothers."

Moore, who is 32, adds that it was the music of Patti Smith and The Ramones, however, that really set the stage for his current career. "The moment I heard them I was blown out of the water. I used to drive to the city to see all these bands at Max's [a seminal Manhattan nightclub], then finally I moved there."

Like many a serious underground rock fan, Moore collected comic books and records, and dreamed of forming a band that would let him quit his day job. He eventually met his wife, Kim Gordon, a transplanted L.A. art student and rock scene hanger-on, with whom he eventually formed Sonic Youth. ("She first picked up a bass the day we started the band," he remembers.)

To begin with, the Youth, which also features the more expert (but also more experimental) guitar musings of Lee Renaldo (drummer Steve Shelley joined in 1985), moved in seriously avant-garde circles: Glenn Branca and John Cage were big influences, and the band got lumped in with New York's early '80s noisy "no wave" scene.

"It used to be," Moore recalls, "a real emotional effort to get everybody focused enough to put on a great live show. The music's density and dissonance made it nearly impossible for us to play consistently well. Lately we've been more consistent, but then, I've never liked bands that were perfect. We couldn't write a formal pop song if we tried, but as we become more sophisticated musicians, that's what's coming out. Our next album is going to sound just like a train."

Moore says that Sonic Youth's music expands and grows when it gets played live — he has considered the very '70s idea of putting out a live album. Things, he admits, have come full circle musically: He and the band have started paying attention to aspects of music that for many years they ignored while developing their own sound. "We are," he says, "a half-generation older than all these new bands, than hardcore bands, for instance, and bands that are rethinking the '70s."

"I remember when I first moved to New York, the most influential quote I'd ever read was this quote from Paul Simonon of The Clash about how he'd thrown out his Led Zeppelin albums. I thought that was so important. And about five years later, in 1980 or '81, I drove home to my Mom's house and I saw all these Led Zeppelin and Deep Purple and Pink Floyd albums with my name on them, and it was like I'd forgotten they'd existed. That's how powerful of an upheaval punk rock had been in my life. I'd completely forgotten my history, they'd been wiped out of my mind. Nowadays, kids like [Seattle-rockers] Soundgarden are all reevaluating that stuff, and that's cool — I've actually gone out and rebought all those records. But in 1977 I thought it was so important to actually get rid of them."

Still, Moore says he feels Sonic Youth's sensibilities are allied to '60s artists like Jimi Hendrix and Janis Joplin in that his group's music is somewhat improvisational in nature (though not so much in practice, relying as it does on pre-tuned guitars). The fringing elements of the '60s, he reminds us, made music that went far beyond mere pop — music that was sometimes hard to listen to.

"In the '60s," says Moore, "the audience was willing to listen harder, and there is still an audience like that out there, people who haven't been programmed to like Whitesnake."

Obsessed beyond question: French performance artist J.M. Maddeddu.

DANCE AND FRANCE

Choreographer Joan Lazarus and French comedian J.M. Maddeddu make Bay Area appearances

JOAN LAZARUS/DANCE. At Theater Artaud, SF. Thursday, Aug. 9th.
J.M. MADDEDDU. At Cowell Theater, SF. Wednesday, Aug. 8th.

By Rita Felciano

JOAN LAZARUS is a dancer's choreographer. She knows that dancers need to be able to show their individuality. So just as in a jazz ensemble where musicians step in and out of the group, her dancers emerge from various configurations and solo passages, only to be absorbed into the ensemble again. In this way, real talent can be spotlighted, and less experienced dancers are challenged because they cannot hide in the group. It's a technique Lazarus used in all four of the very different pieces she presented to an appreciative audience last week.

Her ensemble of eight dancers — six women and two men — is somewhat uneven, but has some very fine performers, particularly in Bonnie Brooks, a compact and very strong dancer who stood out in the way her every move was imbued with energy — she danced out to the very edge. Also excellent were Michael Armstrong's expressive shifts and balances and Laura Elaine Ellis's fluid stretches and liquid leaps.

The program opened with a premiere, Litany, for the whole ensemble. (Ariel designed the very pretty costumes: multicolored tie-dyed skirts over matching leotards.) The leisurely paced work began with unison circular arm swings to a three-step back-and-forth pattern. Gradually, as Allen Holub's music (which reminded me of an updated William Tell Overture) moved from its initial drone to tolling bells to an exploding rainstorm, the ensemble broke up into smaller groups and ever-shifting configurations of twos and threes, only to reconstitute itself again in the end.

There were some attractive details:

tripping little steps on half-pointe that sliced through the chorus, a dance of splayed fingers, a trio of deep diagonal plies and dainty picking gestures, as if from a hand. Lazarus has a nice eye for balance, but the work seemed long and looked rough, primarily because the performance was rubbery and lacked cohesive tension. It never got to that smooth, flowing, even-keeled meditative state, which, judging from the title, Lazarus was probably aiming for.

Fault de Fault was a study of languid defiance that was poignant and funny at the same time. Dressed by Carolin Klismith in winged grey and white pants that puffed up as the dancers turned and dancing to a spitting rap score by Gil Scott Heron, Lazarus's dancers were imbued with street smarts, anger and strutting aggression. It was quite a splendid sight to see Brooks and Armstrong circling each other like caged tigers while three dancers in the background moonwalked across the stage, forming a movie-like backdrop. It was a fine piece, well performed.

Avoidance, the oldest piece on the program (1980) was excellently performed by Brooks, Ellis and Carie Lee. Like bouncing electrical charges, these three dancers were forever attracted and repulsed by each other as they twirled and ran through the circle of light in the center of the stage. Bouncing and stretching with quick-as-lightning rolls and leaps, this was a fast-paced and tightly-constructed work that obviously has withstood the test of time.

The program ended with Suite Buddies, a visualization of high school students' accounts of what it means to be "in" and "out." Michael Armstrong, in a beautiful and self-absorbed solo, did not seem particularly unhappy to be "out."

An outsider of a different sort was performing at the same time across town at the Cowell Theater. Making his United States debut in a four-night stint was French performance artist J.M. Maddeddu. The man is unquestionably obsessed; his comedy stretched to the limit, both in the short films he showed and in his onstage performance. In his films, Maddeddu takes an idea, such as peering in on theatergoers in a bathroom during intermission (piling them on top of one another like in a Marx brothers movie) or the concept of "body sculpture" (literally beating a head into a work of art), and pushes it over the edge. Some of the results are quite funny. Others — such as the supposed uniformity of Japanese businessmen — may strike Europeans as funny, but are offensive here.

In his live act, Maddeddu proceeded in a similarly single-minded, straight-for-the-bull's-eye way. Greeting individual audience members effusively by alternately spouting supposed nonsense syllables "ah so," "ah sa," he gradually sped up the language until he was mumbling "assassinate" as he reached the stage.

Maddeddu looks like a six-foot tall version of actor Luis de Funes and uses some of the same awkward and bumbling body language in the way he turns his head, staring at the audience with those big eyes while he works his way through a stage full of crunched up paper balls. His prop is a white stick that evolves from a counting rod to a golf club to a billiard cue to a blind man's walking cane to a whip.

In the last part of his live performance, Maddeddu told the story of a man who travels in a jungle, encounters birds and frogs, loses and regains his hearing, meets a monstrous female and eventually gives birth. He used a kind of proto-language he calls "Grommelo," but whose basis is unquestionably French. Utilizing pantomime and excellent vocal sound effects, the work had a voluptuously Marquesian feel to it. But because so much of the humor depended on your almost understanding the language, I doubt that it could fully be communicated to an English-speaking audience.

GO ASK ALICE

The Mime Troupe's 'Rats' follows a modern-day Alice through the looking glass

RATS: A DREAM PLAY. By Andrea Snow, Joan Holden, Robert Alexander and Ellen Callas. Directed by Daniel Chumley. Music by Bruce Barthol, Muziki Roberson and Elio Kavee; lyrics by Bruce Barthol and Robert Alexander. Performed by the San Francisco Mime Troupe at various Bay Area parks through Sept. 3rd.

By Misha Berson

THE SAN Francisco Mime Troupe turns out roughly two types of political comedies: the hot-off-the-press bulletins from the front (for example) and the longer, meatier looks at larger issues—like their recent tragi-comedy about Israelis and Palestinians, Seeing Double.

Rats: A Dream Play definitely falls into the front-line category. Intermissionless and barely an hour long, this is an ingenious, if in places ragged, revamping of Alice in Wonderland. The script has the slap-dash topicality of something concocted by a bunch of writers rifling through a month's worth of newspapers with KPFA newscasts on full blast in the background. The savings and loan crisis, the congressional squall over "obscene" art funded by the National Endowment for the Arts, the crack epidemic, the Redwood Summer environmentalist actions, the endangered status of the spotted owl—these and other late-breaking concerns show up on this quick tour of the zeitgeist.

Our Alice (played with charm and spunk by Edris Cooper) is a hip black woman artist way down on her luck. In the trenchant first scene, we learn she's perpetually low-income ("California cuisine came and went before I ever ate any") and reduced to camping out in the flat of her snippy pal Rhonda (Sharon Lockwood). (Rhonda is a "recovering socialist" working for Dianne Feinstein's gubernatorial campaign.) Alice's other major problem is artistic blockage. Her heady days as a graffiti artist and billboard bandit are over and no new creative impulse has taken hold.

Falling asleep to the drone of the TV, Alice dreams that a Nazi skinhead Rat is ripping off her paltry savings. Following him down a rat hole, she finds herself in a perverse Wonderland: a devastated forest where endangered animals (including a spotted owl) "confront their grief and rage" in cleverly parodied AA-style support group. From there she gets sidetracked by a six-armed, crack-pushing Caterpillar (Michael Sullivan, wearing Keiko Shimosato's clever puppet-style costume) and later runs into a drawling, chain-smoking Duchess (Arthur Holden) who gleefully tortures an "obscene" baby. (That's a hit-and-miss triple-swipe at Sen. Jesse Helms' stands on art, abortion and tobacco subsidies.)

On Alice runs in pursuit of the larcenous rat, encountering even more characters from Lewis Carroll's Wonderland in new guises. The Mad Hatter (Sullivan) and the March Hare (Bruce Barthol impersonating Neil Bush) turn their tea party into an S&L corruption spree, while a congressman Dormouse (Ellen Callas) dozes at the table. And what Queen of Hearts is shouting "Off with their heads?" None other than our new crusader for capital punishment, Dianne Feinstein (Sharon Lockwood.)

As entertaining as it often is, Rats cries out for more songs (there are only two), sharper acting in the Jesse Helms and endangered animals segments and a more convincing ending. Alice wakes up to grim reality, but her/our nightmare isn't exactly over. So how can she turn so quickly from despair to activist determination? Even her lost kitty (a symbol of hope named Nelson, as in Mandela) reappears — and you don't know whether to go "Awwwww..." or yell "Cop out!"

Rats does demonstrate the Mime Troupe's uncanny ability to keep pace with the times — if not in style, certainly in content. As in many of its plays, the heroine is a progressive humanist who looks at the madness around her and tries to keep disillusionment at bay. But it also acknowledges that Sixties-style faith — in people rising up collectively to do the right thing for the planet and each other — is getting ever more precious and difficult to come by.

PANDORA'S BOX The Dance Brigade takes on the myth of the very first woman in this modern dance/movement/sign language production. Trapeze artists swing overhead as representations of the Goddess, large women give birth to the mortal world and dancers tackle issues of abortion, addiction, racism, poverty and the environment in this socially relevant show. Plays tonight through Sun/19 at 8 pm, Laney College, 900 Fallon, Oakl. $12. 465-3686.

TOWARD THE NEW WAVE Yasuzo Masumura's social satires changed post-war filmmaking in Japan, and the latest of the Pacific Film Archives' series examines the films of both Masumura and Yuzo Kawashima. Tonight, Masumura's Warm Current at 7:30 pm is a skeptical remake of a pre-war classic, and The Build-Up at 9:20 pm satirizes social climbing in the advertising industry. Pacific Film Archive, 2625 Durant, Berk. $4.50-$5.25. 642-1412.

'MEN DANCING 9' It's the ninth year for this male dancers' showcase, and the quality of performers only improves — this year's show includes Remy Charlip, Tracy Rhoades, Contraband men and former Limon dancers Fred Matthews and Gary Masters plus Marcela Pereira's capoeira and country-western partner and line dancing by the SF Saddletamps. Through Sat/18 at 8 pm, plus Sun/19 at 2 pm, Theatre Artaud, 450 Florida, SF. $12. 621-7797.

'SAVAGE IN LIMBO' The Broads off Broadway are broads on bar stools in their latest production in a bar backroom. John Patrick Shanley's one-act play of lonesome soul searching in the confines of a bar looks into the minds of five isolated characters. Opens tonight and plays Fri.-Sun. at 8 pm, through Sept. 2nd, Miz Browns, 2565 Mission (at 21st St.), SF. $7. 387-7209.

UAKTI These Brazilian percussionists blend classical, New Age and South American rhythms to create original reworkings of traditional sounds, and they've collaborated with the likes of Milton Nascimento and Paul Simon. Tonight, they perform "A Concert for the Environment," co-sponsored by the Haas Center for Public Service and Bay Area Action. 8 pm, Dinkelspiel Auditorium, 504 Emerson, Palo Alto. $10. 723-4317.

'A NAME YOU NEVER GOT' Ronda Slater's journey to find her daughter began with a relationship ad back in 1963. Now she's on the college lecture circuit with her one-woman show, a humorous but dramatic story of how she was cajoled into giving up her baby in the '60s, and how she eventually found her again. Plays tonight, Sat/18 and Fri/24-Sat/25 at 7:30 pm at Live Oak Theatre, 1301 Shattuck, Berk. $15. 654-5264.

NAO BUSTAMANTE This Marsh, Contraband and Elbows Akimbo alum performs The Soul Sentence of Mis Demeanor, where her character is imprisoned in an illusory freedomless world without bars and yearns to become an erotic dancer. Plays through Sat/18 and Thurs/23-Sat/25 at 8:30 pm, Fobbo Gallery, 3747 23rd St., SF. Call for price. 695-0640.

'WATCH OUT, everyone has a baby when they move to Bisbee," said the woman whose kid was tugging at my sleeve as I tried to pen a postcard in the Stock Exchange Bar, while Nolan Ryan was still trying to get his 300th win on the big screen TV. Bisbee is a small mining town in southeastern Arizona, a Western-history-filled corner of the state where lots of groundbreaking events happened back in those savage days — such as Apache chief Geronimo's surrender to the U.S. Cavalry in Skeleton Canyon, September 6th, 1886, an event that symbolically marked the end of native resistance to the white man's takeover.

The town of Bisbee, however, grew out of the mining industry that boomed in the state in the late 1800s/early 1900s, and died out soon thereafter, but not after raking in millions from copper, gold, silver and other metals and leaving behind huge open pits, dangerous tunnels caverns, shack-filled ghost towns and dozens of millions of tall tales — a whole culture that was born, flourished and died, all within the last hundred years.

There are still remnants left: The ghost towns, for instance, can be sought out and poked through, some of them now riddled with gift and curio shoppes (like Tombstone, where "life-size figures" mark the spot of the OK Corral shootout), others with telling museums, a few still holding onto the mining like a horse on a tether whose hitching post is shifting back and forth in the sand.

Though the Queen Mine in Bisbee shut down years ago, the community still goes on. It's not a ghost town, but it's hardly a bastion of modern-day living, either. And if resident Walter Swan is a person to judge the town by, then this place is like nowhere else on earth — and how it gets along is still a curiosity. Walter is the owner of the town's only One-Book Bookstore (which, incidentally, sits smack next to another, more "regular" bookstore); he is, of course, the penman behind the store's only book, me n' Henry, his account, as the book's jacket reads, of "growing up on the old family homestead in Coshise County when Arizona was still an infant state."

The story behind Walter's book is a little unusual. He used to love telling stories about growing up to his eight kids, and at the request of his wife, Dolores, began writing them down. He basically had a book's worth by 1951, he says, and dreamed of eventually publishing the lot. He did get some published in magazines like True West and Model T, but ten years of letters to book publishing houses met only with rejection. So, he was left with no choice but to put the thing out himself.

"Now I don't know much — except about plastering, I did that for 50 years" — so the fact that his book has sold nearly 7,000 copies since first released in September, 1988, still throws him for a loop. "How did it happen?" he asks; "can you believe it?" Not unless I'd seen the proof of his success for myself: seen the videotape of his appearance on David Letterman's show, seen the clippings about him from newspapers and magazines around the country, seen the store, which he opened eight or nine months ago and, most importantly, heard the amazement and the excitement in the 74-year-old Walter's voice. Walter Swan is one unique businessman — no sensible business school graduate would ever have done things this way — and the public eats it up. "Folks say it's the most bizarre thing they've ever heard," he says. He sells 20 or 30 copies of me n Henry a day from his store, probably telling the same story he told me about his strange success over and over to anyone who will listen. He's got CNN coming out to do a short feature on him, and to top it off, Disney is even interested in the movie rights to the book!

The book itself is a collection of stories from his childhood, written in a down-home style that's completely natural, left intact because it was edited and proofed only by his wife and a few local friends; it's a style that writers have so often tried to copy, but have rarely achieved. The book may not be a masterpiece, but it's a lot of fun to read.

To get a copy, either stop by the One-Book Bookstore the next time you're through Bisbee; if you're lucky, a nice little girl will be there to snap a Polaroid of you and Walter. Otherwise, drop a line (and a check for $19.95) to: Swan Enterprises, PO Box 4309, Bisbee, AZ 85603-4309. You'll be glad you did.

WORLD FIESTA Napa Valley gets a blast of energy with some of Al Rapone's rockin' zydeco music, Wazobia's talking drums and the sounds of David Auerbach's many rare instruments. Bring a picnic and sip away as you listen to Chalo Eduardo's Brazilian Beat, the Westwind International Folk Ensemble and Grupo Arauco. 3 pm, Rodney Strong Vineyards, 11455 Old Redwood Hwy., Healdsburg. $20. (707) 963-9630.

TRIBUTE TO LU WATTERS Lu Watters worshipers from Japan made the trek all the way to the U.S. for this celebration of what they call "The Great One who's name is synonymous with the Yerba Buena Jazz Band." The King Cresol Jazz Band (the pun's even better in Japanese) performs with the Natural Gas Jazz Band, the Devil Mountain Jazz Band, and Wally Rose & Bob Helm. 1-7 pm, Bimbo's 365 Club, 1025 Columbus, SF. $6. 661-9893.

A BRIEF AFFAIR FOR AIDS The I Beam strips down to the basics for this AIDS Emergency Fund benefit tea dance, the club's second annual "brief affair." The staff greets you in their best lingerie and provides a clothes check for adventurous patrons, with the generous and scantily clad bartenders donating their tip money ($1,600 last year) to the Emergency Fund. The "hottest" underwear wearer can cover him/herself with the 100 dollar bills they take home as a prize. 3 pm, I Beam, 1748 Haight, SF. $5. 668-6023.

'TUPPERWARE' BARBECUE A suburban home out in the Sunset is the location for another of the SF Cacophony Society's summertime rituals. It's an all-American backyard barbecue and big band party, so bring your best "Tupperware," the old guitar and your favorite '50s records and tapes. 4 pm, 2066 30th Ave. (between Pacheco & Quintara), SF. Free. 681-3189.

'SING WITH A BAND' In true amusement park style, Jan Tange's monthly "Sing With a Band" lets you try your luck at rock stardom by setting you up with a professional backup band and letting you go at it (for $6/song). This week, the Bay Area Music Alliance arranges its meeting around the event and gives members a discount on the cover price. 8:30 pm, New George's, 842 Fourth St., San Rafael. $5; $3 BAMA members; $6 per song. 457-1515.

'DUNK A D' I don't exactly know what underwater record-spinning sounds like, but you might find out tonight. Patrons dunk local DJs Carey Spencer and Steve Masters as Tooth 'n Nail rocks away. 9 pm, Covered Wagon Saloon, 917 Folsom (at Fifth St.), SF. Call for price. 974-1585.

"Emma Goldman Papers" brings the centuries-old struggle to light. This early 20th-century feminist anarchist yielded reactions from figures like Lenin, and had correspondence with Martha Sanger and Helen Keller. The documents on display include these letters and notations as well as the U.S. government's warrant ordering her deportation and Hoover's statement that she was one of the most dangerous women in America. Through Sept. 30th, Mon.-Thurs. and Sat., 10 am-6 pm; Fri., noon-6 pm; Sun., 1-5 pm, SF Public Library, Larkin and McAllister, SF. Free. 643-8518.

MULTICULTURAL PUBLIC TV GRANTS The National Asian American Telecommunications Association gives grants ranging from $5,000 to $50,000 for creative works for public TV on subjects of interest to Asian Americans. The application deadline is Oct. 30th, 1990. Send for application forms to NAATA-Media Grants, 346 Ninth St., second floor, SF, CA 94103. 863-0814.

'SHOP TALK' Marlon Riggs and Mable J. Haddock lead off this workshop/forum with a panel on "who decides" issues. The Black Filmmakers Hall of Fame and the Afro-American Studies Department at the University of California at Berkeley sponsor this seminar for Black Independent Filmmakers to meet, exchange ideas, collect information and critique the works of 30 invited participants. In conjunction with the program, workshop leader Billy Woodberry's Bless Their Little Hearts screens Thurs. at 6:30 pm, Lake Merritt Theater, 1834 Park at E. 18th Ave., Oakl. Call for price. 835-3535. Workshops, today beginning at 1 pm, Thurs/23, from 10 am-6:30 pm, Dwinelle Hall, UC Berkeley, near Telegraph and Bancroft, Berk. $40. 465-0804.

BRAVE NEW WHIRL The extravagant masks, puppets and elaborately costumed performers bring this Persona Grata Production to its dark comic life as the story of Kkurtis K. searching for his lost girlfriend Jill J. unfolds. Opens tonight and plays Wed.-Sat. at 8:30 pm, through Sept. 1st, Magic Theatre, Fort Mason Center, Building D, Marina and Buchanan, SF. $10-$12. 441-8001 or 441-8822.

THURSDAY

AUGUST CERAMIC SECONDS SALE ACCI Gallery ceramics makers clear out their studios and cover the floors and walls of the gallery with a myriad of ceramic items in this "rock-bottom" sale. Starting today, the gallery displays items ranging from the practical tableware to lamps to obtuse wall decorations that would go perfect in "Aunt Rose's really hip condo living room." In other words, there's something for everyone. May be too much of a temptation for gift givers. Today through Sat., 10:30 am-5:30 pm; Sun., noon-5 pm, ACCI Gallery, 1652 Shattuck, Berk. Free. 843-2527.

BOOMERANG This collaboration of musicians and a poet create that beatnik party, finger snapping sound through boomerang-like cooperation: The instrumentalists reflect the sound of the words and the poet flows with the rhythm of the sounds. Watch out. 8 pm, Pages, 1812 Divisadero at Bush, SF. Free. 567-3581.

THOMAS GELLER One frequently misunderstood minority is bisexuals — many books treating the subject written by gay, straight and even academic sources portray bisexuality in a negative light. Thomas Geller, editor of Bisexuality: A Reader and Source Book, a book that presents a more complete and balanced picture of bisexuality, discusses ideas from the book. 8 pm, Cody's Books, 2454 Telegraph, Berk. Free. 845-7852.

HERE TO STAY This week, this gay and lesbian talk show broadcasts footage from the Vancouver Gay Games III, featuring the Vancouver Gay Volleyball Team and the SF's Gay Mens Chorus preparing for the festivities, as well as an interview with a local gay athlete who competed as a swimmer. 10 pm, Viacom Channel 25.

'SHOP TALK' See Wed/22.

FRIDAY

RESEARCH ATROCITY PARTY Dark Carnival celebrates the release of J.G. Ballard's The Atrocity Exhibition — a look into the American psyche that was suppressed almost immediately after it was first published 20 years ago. Tonight's party features a rare original edition of the book, odd food, videos and the chance to hang around with what Dark Carnival calls "the coolest publishing staff to menace the earth." Hmmm. 6-8 pm, Dark Carnival, 2978 Adeline, Berk. Free. 845-7757.

AUGUST CERAMIC SECONDS SALE See Thurs/23.

Movies

First Runs

A selective listing of first-run movies and complete listings of repertory-house films in the central Bay Area. Since programs are subject to last-minute revisions, call theaters to verify times and titles. Capsule reviews by Zene Jones, unless otherwise noted.

- Air America San Francisco: Galaxy (1265 Sutter at Van Ness. 474-8700): daily at 7:30 and 10:10 with matinees Sat-Sun. at 12:15, 2:40 and 5. East Bay: UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for times. Rockridge Showcase West (293 Whitmore, near 45th St. and Broadway, Oakl. 558-2285): daily at 4:50, 7 and 9:10 with matinees Sat-Sun. at 12:30 and 2:40. Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107): call for times. Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): daily at 12:35, 3, 5:25, 7:50 and 10:15. Empire (85 West Portal at Vicente. 661-2539): daily at 12:25, 2:55, 5:20, 7:45 and 10:10.
- Animation Celebration II East Bay: Northside (1828 Euclid, Berk. 841-6000): Sat-Sun. at 11:30.
- Another 48 HRS. Forget about plot just regard this as an action! action! movie in which Nick Nolte and Eddie Murphy take on mysterious drug kingpin "Ice Man" and his goons. At least Murphy's momentarily back to minimum profanity and the appealing character that won him instant stardom in the original. East Bay: Lake Merritt Theater

CRITIC'S CHOICE! Dance

Theater Flamenco

In the business world it is called "making a lateral move"; in the arts it is not very common. But one artist who is trying it is David Boyet, whose spectacular jumps used to delight audiences in Khadra International Folk Ballet. Instead of moving up, he moved over to Theatre Flamenco, where he makes his debut as a flamenco and Spanish classical dancer. The leap is not as farfetched as it may seem because flamenco has deep roots in Middle Eastern and Southeast European dances. Also joining the company in a program that includes three world premieres are former jazz dancer Ercilia Santos and flamenco dancer Lourdes Rodriques.

— Rita Felciano

■ Theatre Flamenco, Fri/17-Sun/19 and Sat/25-Sun/26 at 8 pm, Cowell Theater, Pier Two, Fort Mason Center, Buchanan at Marina, SF. 552-3656.

(1834 Park at E. 18th Ave., Oakl. 835-3535): daily at 6:05 and 9:50 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2:20. Albany (1115 Solano, Albany. 524-5656): call for times.

■ Arachnophobia Fifties' monster movies are funnier and scarier than ever, as director Frank Marshall weaves a fabulous fun fright from a tale of Venezuelan killer spiders invading a small California town. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Royal (1529 Polk at California. 474-0353): daily at 12:45, 3:10, 5:30, and 10. East Bay: Shattuck Cinemas (2230 Shattuck, Berk. 644-3370): call for times.

■ Betsy's Wedding San Francisco: Balboa (38th Ave. and Balboa. 221-8164): daily at 3, 7 and 10:45. East Bay: Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107): call for times.

■ Blue Velvet East Bay: Northside (1828 Euclid, Berk. 841-6000): daily at 7 and 9:30 with additional shows Sat.-Sun. at 2:15, 4:30 and 11:45.

■ Bye Bye Blues Anyone who was an adult in WWII will utterly identify with Rebecca Jenkins as she's forced to exchange her pampered British Army officer's wife life in wartime India to near-poverty back home in Canada. How she changes her circumstances is flavored with time-flawlessly-remembered moments that make the movie a joy. San Francisco: Lumiere (1572 California at Polk. 885-3200): daily at 1, 3:20, 5:40, 8 and 10:20.

■ Cadillac Man Give Cadillac quality comedian Robin Williams a script and you have an Edsel of a movie, though he does try hard as he finds himself about to lose his job as a car salesman at a crucial financial time until nutty Tim Robbins inadvertently saves him, if not the movie. East Bay: Lake Merritt Theater (1834 Park at E. 18th Ave., Oakl. 835-3535): daily at 7:55 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 4:10.

■ Chicago Joe and the Show Girl San Francisco: Vogue (Sacramento and Presidio. 221-8183): daily at 5:30, 7:45 and 10 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:15 and 3:15.

■ Cinema Paradiso Loving, set-in-a-Sicilian-village look at people who love movies, specifically impish little Salvatore Cascio, who learns to differentiate between reel and real life from compassionate projectionist Philippe Noiret in a movie that will long linger in your mind. San Francisco: Four Star (2200 Clement at 23rd Ave. 752-2650): daily at noon, 2:30, 5, 7:35 and 10:05. Gateway (Jackson at Battery. 421-3353): daily at 7 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2 and 4:30. East Bay: Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107): call for times.

■ The Cook, The Thief, His Wife and Her Lover X-rated Grand Guignol of a movie in which we're spared no side of Thief Michael Gambon's ghoulish nature as he avenges himself on wife Helen Mirren for her infidelity with bookish Diner Alan Howard that's food for thought, but the kind that'll make you throw up. San Francisco: Opera Plaza (Van Ness and Golden Gate. 771-0102): daily at 8 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 3:35.

■ Days of Thunder Good work by Tom Cruise as a young man with the drive to become a champion on the NASCAR circuit and great work by Robert Duvall as his (toy)mentor turn this stock movie about stock car racing into a sunfire pleaser for undiscriminating summer audiences; even I liked it more than I wanted to. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Cannery (2801 Leavenworth at Beach. 441-5560): daily at 1, 3:15, 5:30, 7:45 and 10.

■ Dick Tracy It's brilliant style all the way, if not too much else, but that's enough to give Warren Beatty's movie a delightful comic-book look that makes the gangsters' inches-deep makeup just right (and Al Pacino a star), as nightclub floozie Madonna tries to pry Tracy away from Glenn Headly's Tess Truehart, and style wins out all the way. East Bay: Shattuck Cinemas (2230 Shattuck, Berk. 644-3370): call for times.

■ Die Hard 2: Die Harder Bruce Willis takes the "dull" out of Dulles in this Airport '90, which jokes about its resemblance to its predecessor, but doesn't mess with a successful formula. It's silly, stupid, obvious and ridiculous, but it starts in high gear and never lets up. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Coronet (3575 Geary at Arguello. 752-4400): daily at 11:30 am, 2:10, 4:45, 7:30 and 10:20. Stonestown (19th Ave. and Winston. 221-8182): daily at 11:30 am, 2:10, 4:45, 7:30 and 10:20. East Bay: California (Kittredge at Shattuck, Berk. 848-0620): daily at 11:45 am, 2:10, 4:30, 7:15 and 9:50. Grand Lake (3200 Grand, Oakl. 452-3556): daily at 4:15, 7:15 and 10:10.

■ Duck Tales: The Movie Treasure of the Lost Lamp This Disney-mation feature begins as an Indiana Jones adventure without Indy, then lapses into I Dream of Jeannie without Barbara Eden. It's well done, but far longer than the attention span of its intended audience. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore. 931-9800): call for times. East Bay: Grand Lake (3200 Grand, Oakl. 452-3556): daily at 12:45 and 2:30. California (Kittredge at Shattuck, Berk. 848-0620): daily at noon, 1:35, 3:10, 4:50, 6:25, 8 and 9:30.

■ Exorcist III San Francisco: Empire (85 West Portal at Vicente. 661-2539): daily at 1, 3:20, 5:40, 8 and 10:20. Galaxy (1285 Sutter at Van Ness. 474-8700): daily at 6:10, 8:20 and 10:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:30, 1:40 and 3:50. East Bay: Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): daily at 1:10, 3:30, 5:50, 8:10 and 10:25. Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107): call for times. UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for times.

■ Flatliners Five medical students headed by manipulative Kiefer Sutherland, are on a crash course to prove there's life after death, but all that's not nearly so menacing as director Joel Schumacher's ceaseless manipulation of our senses as he changes beauty to something sinister, slits open cadavers to reveal bloody organs, and lingers everything with the bizarre and vaguely obscure, and a lurking, indefinable horror. San Francisco: Cinema 21 (2141 Chestnut at Steiner. 921-6720): call for times. East Bay: Rockridge Showcase West (293 Whitmore, near 45th St. and Broadway, Oakl. 658-2285): daily at 5, 7 and 9 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1 and 3. UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for times. Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107): call for times. Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): daily at 12:20, 2:50, 5:15, 7:40 and 10:05.

■ Frankenhooker Frank (Basket Case 1 and 2) Henenlotter's purple-and-black comedy gives new meaning to the term "ensemble piece." Some will find it offensive, some romantic; if you're the type to consider going to a midnight movie in the first place, you'll probably find it hilarious. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Roxy Cinema (3117 18th St. 863-1087): Sat. at midnight. East Bay: UC Theatre (2036 Shattuck, Berk. 843-6267): Fri. at midnight.

■ The Freshman Marlon Brando and Matthew Broderick are marvelous as a N.Y. crook and his protegee (after Broderick's been ripped off at the airport en route for film school and has been offered a lucrative scam of his own by Brando). It's clever, funny, hilarious, tightly scripted, and should freshen up your entire summer. San Francisco: Galaxy (1285 Sutter at Van Ness. 474-8700): daily at 7 and 9:45 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 11:45, 2:10 and 4:30. East Bay: UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for times. Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107): call for times.

■ Ghost Patrick Swayze gets murdered but his invisible ghost hangs around for the funeral in a movie that has everything going for it, every mood imaginable, and Whoopi Goldberg in her best role in years as a fake medium who's amazed to find she's the only person who can hear Swayze. San Francisco: Regency II (1268 Sutter at Van Ness. 776-8054): daily at noon, 2:40, 5:10, 7:50 and 10:40. East Bay: Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): daily at 11:45 am, 2:20, 4:55, 7:30 and 10:10. Piedmont (4186 Piedmont at 41st St., Oakl. 654-2727): call for times. Shattuck Cinemas (2230 Shattuck, Berk. 644-3370): call for times.

■ Ghost Dad The happy ending brigade worked overtime on this innocuous, old-fashioned comedy that shouldn't disappoint Bill Cosby's fans. He plays a neglectful but loving and creative father who tries to take care of his children after he dies in an accident. (Steve Warren) East Bay: Albany (1115 Solano, Albany. 524-5556): call for times.

■ Going Places East Bay: Northside (1828 Euclid, Berk. 841-6000): daily at 7:15 and 9:45 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2 and 4:45.

■ Henry V Kenneth Branagh's version's so different from Laurence Olivier's that comparisons are difficult, but it's brilliantly acted by a superb British cast, its darkness lightened by a hilarious scene between two women and should be judged entirely on its own merits. San Francisco: Opera Plaza (Van Ness and Golden Gate. 771-0102): daily at 7:05 and 9:35.

■ The Hunt for Red October The impressive-looking movie's first half's got more confusing ingredients than a double submarine sandwich, but once the is-Lithuanian-submarine-captain-Sean Connery-headed-for-the-U.S.-to-defect-or-destroy? plot's established, the second half's action's sensational and would even qualify as white-knuckling. San Francisco: Balboa (38th Ave. and Balboa. 221-8164): daily at Answering A Relationship Ad Is Now A Lot Easier.

Introducing 1-900-844-5555

person to personals

The Bay Guardian
Relationship Reply Line

Introducing yourself to someone new isn't the easiest thing in the world to do. But since 1966, Bay Guardian Classified has helped thousands of people do just that. And now the Bay Area's best Relationship Ads are even better.

Because now you have a fast, easy way to respond to the Relationships advertisers in the Bay Guardian ... by phone. It's called Person-to-Personals, and it's the state of the art in personal messaging systems. When you call, you can learn more about the advertiser than what's in the paper by simply listening to their outgoing Person-to-Personals message. Not all advertisers record a message right away, but you can still respond by phone.

Think of it — no time consuming letter-writing (unless you want to, of course). No waiting by the mailbox day after day for the response to your response. Person-to-Personals is a sophisticated touch-tone service that takes you closer to your heart's desire, step by step. You can introduce yourself to the person whose ad caught your eye (or ear) in the privacy of your own phone.

Your voice will be clearly recorded with the highest technical standards available. You can hear your own message played back to you before you save it. Or change it. Or delete it ... and try again. The system allows you to browse through any or all of our advertisers' outgoing messages. And you can leave as many messages as you want to as many advertisers as you wish.

If you think of yourself as a low-tech person in a high-tech world, don't worry. Person-to-Personals is designed to be as user-friendly as possible, providing clear, simple instructions each time you call. The fee for calling the Person-to-Personals number is only 99¢ per minute, automatically added to your monthly phone bill. That's a small price to pay for a priceless opportunity.

12:45, 4:40 and 8:40. Cannery (2801 Leavenworth at Beach, 441-5560): call for times. East Bay: Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville, 420-0107): call for times.

■ Jesus of Montreal Jesus look-alike actor Lothaire Bluteau's been hired to direct an annual Montreal passion play. But his very talented cast isn't what the church had in mind, whereupon life begins to imitate the Christ story with fascinating results all the way around. San Francisco: Clay (2261 Fillmore at Clay, 348-1123): daily at noon, 2:30, 5, 7:30 and 10. East Bay: ACT (2128 Center at Shattuck, Berk. 548-7200): daily at 7:15 and 9:40 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 12:15, 2:30 and 4:50.

■ Jetsons: The Movie Hanna-Barbera retro animation and plotting in a futuristic setting, safe to send the kids to, lets a "spin doctor" reconcile capitalism and ecology in a way even young viewers won't believe. It's The Simpsons for Republicans. (Steve Warren) East Bay: Albany (1115 Solano, Albany, 524-5656): call for times.

■ The Jungle Book Not one of my favorites, but a minor classic among Disney animated features, this Kipling adaptation should leave kids Mowglieful with its jazzy score and funny animals, including the Phil

Harris-voiced Baloo the bear. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore, 931-9800): call for times. East Bay: Oaks (1875 Solano, Berk. 528-1836): call for times.

■ Lonely Woman Seeks Life Companion San Francisco: Opera Plaza (Van Ness and Golden Gate, 771-0102): daily at 7 and 9 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1, 3 and 5. ■ Longtime Companion Very well scripted and acted story of the affect of AIDS on a small group of friends and acquaintances from its announcement in a 1981 N.Y. Times article to the present day that expertly weaves together emotion and information in an all-encompassing, moving, learning experience. San Francisco: Presidio (Chestnut near Scott, 922-1318): call for times.

■ The Mahabharata Peter Brooks' three-hour condensation of the Sanskrit "epic of world power and beauty into an intimidating, exposition-heavy narrative. I give it one thumb up and one down — on the same hand. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Lumiere (1572 California at Polk, 885-3200): daily at 1, 4:30 and 8.

■ May Fools Louis Malle's film's set against the May '68 mini-revolution that is only a backdrop for the goings-on in a far-from-Paris failed wine estate, in which Michel Piccoli's outstanding, closely followed by Miou-

Mioui and Harriet Walter in a movie that puts the "vive" back in "la France." San Francisco: Bridge (3010 Geary at Blake, 751-3212): daily at 12:30, 2:45, 5, 7:20 and 9:40. East Bay: ACT (2128 Center at Shattuck, Berk. 548-7200): daily at 7:20 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1, 3:05 and 5:10.

■ Metropolitan Debuting director Whit Stillman examines New York's debutante scene like a WASP Woody Allen, and introduces a young cast that should become known as the "Whit Pack" when they reach deserved stardom. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore, 931-9800): call for times.

■ The Mighty Quinn San Francisco: Balboa (38th Ave. and Balboa, 221-8184): daily at 1:30, 6:55 and 10:40.

■ Mo' Better Blues Spike Lee's movie has quite a bit going for it which unfortunately doesn't include a focal point. Denzel Washington's a dedicated-to-his-music trumpeter, which mostly drives his lady friends up the wall, the jazz musicians give good banter and music but little perception of them, and although he's fine as a compulsive gambler of a band manager, Lee adds little to the what's-it-all-about plot. San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore, 931-9800): call for times. Balboa (38th Ave. and Balboa, 221-8184): daily at 1, 4:45 and 8:30. East Bay: Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): daily at noon, 2:40, 5:20, 8 and 10:30. Fine Arts (Shattuck at Haste, Berk. 548-2036): daily at noon, 2:30, 5, 7:30 and 10. Piedmont (4186 Piedmont at 41st St., Oakl. 654-2727): call for times.

■ Monsieur Hire Darkly disturbing, fascinating film in which funeral-looking voyeur Michel Blanc watches neighbor Sandrine Bonnaire from his darkened apartment, and what happens when she realizes what's going on, that has an added fillip of murder, and in which Blanc's never less than mesmerizing. San Francisco: Lumiere (1572 California at Polk, 885-3200): daily at 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30 and 9:30.

■ My Blue Heaven San Francisco: Empire (65 West Portal at Vicente, 661-2539): daily at 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30 and 9:35. Galaxy (1285 Sutter at Van Ness, 474-8700): daily at 6:20, 8:40 and 10:50 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at noon, 2 and 4:10. East Bay: UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for times. Grand Lake (3200 Grand, Oakl. 452-3556): daily at 1:30, 3:45, 6, 8:15 and 10:25.

■ Navy Seals If you enjoy seeing something that comes off as a recruiting ad, and a very poor one at that, this is for you. But Good Housekeeping wouldn't give it any sort of seal. San Francisco: South Shore Cinemas (2245 Shoreline, Alameda, 521-4200): call for times. Alexandria (5400 Geary at 18th Ave, 752-5100): daily at 12:15, 2:45, 5:15, 7:45 and 10:15. Parkside (19th Ave. and Taraval, 661-1940): call for times. East Bay: Lake Merritt Theater (1834 Park at E. 18th Ave., Oakl. 835-3535): daily at 7:25 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 3:10. Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville, 420-0107): call for times.

■ Pathfinder A teenaged hero saves the day in Nils Raup's Oscar-nominated Lapp adventure that's too exotic for most American teens, who relate more to turtles who share their patois than people of another place and time who only share their feelings. Too violent for kids but recommended for anyone else, especially if you liked The Navigator. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Opera Plaza (Van Ness and Golden Gate, 771-0102): daily at 7:10 and 9:15.

■ Presumed Innocent There's almost no one to like in this intentionally complicated movie about gorgeous lawyer Greta Scacchi who seems to have slept with most of the prosecuting cast and is murdered, leaving married-to-Bonnie-Bedell prosecutor Harrington Ford bereft. The acting's superb; you'll be talking about this movie for a long time. San Francisco: Metro (Union and Webster, 931-1885): daily at 11 am, 1:30, 4:30, 7:30 and 10:30. Stonestown (19th Ave. and Winston, 221-8182): daily at noon, 2:40, 5:20, 8 and 10:35. East Bay: Grand Lake (3200 Grand, Oakl. 452-3556): daily at 1, 4, 7 and 9:45. Berkley (2425 Shattuck at Haste, Berk. 848-4300): daily at noon, 2:20, 4:40, 7:15 and 9:45.

■ Pretty Woman Corporate mogul Richard Gere wants the services of $100-an-hour hooker Julia Roberts for one week, and how it all works out makes for a highly entertaining come-uppance of look-downers-on among other little gems in which Gere's very good and Roberts a dramatic delight. San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore, 931-9800): call for times. East Bay: California (Kittredge at Shattuck, Berk. 848-0620): daily at 7:15 and 9:40.

■ Problem Child San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore, 931-9800): call for times. Northpoint (Powell at Bay, 989-6060): call for times. East Bay: UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for times. Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville, 420-0107): call for times. Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): daily at 12:25, 2:15, 4:05, 5:55, 7:45 and 9:40. Rockridge Showcase West (293 Whitmore, near 45th St. and Broadway, Oakl. 658-2285): daily at 5, 7 and 9 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1 and 3.

■ Quick Change City planner Bill Murray's so sick of New York that he wants only to rob a bank of $1 million, dash to the airport and take off to Martinique, and to that end he dresses up as a clown and gets the money out of the bank, but getting to the airport is something else. It's light fun, if not exactly memorable. San Francisco: Parkside (19th Ave. and Taraval, 661-1940): call for times.

■ Taking Care of Business The latest variation of Trading Places, etc., has escaped con Jim Belushi switching identities with workaholic account executive Charles Grodin in a relax-and-enjoy-it, feel-good comedy that's sloppy on details, but should show you a perfectly good time. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Alhambra (Polk and Green, 775-2137): daily at 12:45, 3, 5:15, 7:40 and 10. East Bay: Grand Lake (3200 Grand, Oakl. 452-3556): daily at 1:15, 3:30, 6, 8:25 and 10:35. Orinda (4 Orinda Theater Square, Orinda, 254-9060): daily at 7 and 9 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1, 3 and 5. Oaks (1875 Solano, Berk. 528-1836): daily at 1:15, 3:15, 5:15, 7:20 and 9:30.

■ Tie Me Up, Tie Me Down Take 23-year-old mental institution patient Antonio Banderas, now declared sane, his search for porn movie queen Victoria Abril to be his bride and her adamant refusal so that he has to tie her up in order to tie her down, and you have a very lively, delightfully acted movie that'll string you along in a way you're bound to find entertaining. San Francisco: Opera Plaza (Van Ness and Golden Gate, 771-0102): daily at 10:05 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:35 and 6.

■ Total Recall Well, that's the last thing you'll wish for where this incredibly violent movie's concerned, as somewhere-in-the-future Arnold Schwarzenegger has Mars nightmares and takes a mind-bending two-week memory of a visit there, and almost loses his mind in the process. Not that you'd notice. San Francisco: Alexandria (5400 Geary at 18th Ave, 752-5100): daily at 12:30, 3, 5:30, 8 and 10:30. East Bay: Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville, 420-0107): call for times. Lake Merritt Theater (1834 Park at E. 18th Ave., Oakl. 835-3535): daily at 5:20 and 9:35 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:05.

■ Two Jakes Constantly demanding your attention but rarely rewarding it, this tedious, confusing sequel to Chinatown shows Robert Towne can still write great lines for Jack Nicholson, but this time he can't find a context worthy of them. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Regency I (1320 Van Ness at Sutter, 885-6773): daily at 1:30, 4:30, 7:30 and 10:30. East Bay: California (Kittredge at Shattuck, Berk. 848-0620): daily at 1, 4, 7 and 9:50. Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): daily at 1:20, 4:15, 7:05 and 9:55.

■ Young Guns II Not only have Billy the Kid (Emilio Estevez), longer-haired with less dialogue Lou Diamond Phillips and now family man Kiefer Sutherland aged a lot in two years, they're no longer together at the film's core, which ruins its rationale and makes it a very valid reason for not resurrecting the Western. San Francisco: Alexandria (5400 Geary at 18th Ave, 752-5100): daily at 1:15, 3:30, 5:50, 8:15 and 10:40. East Bay: UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for times. Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): daily at 12:30, 2:45, 5, 7:10 and 9:25.

■ Wild at Heart San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore, 931-9800): call for times. East Bay: Shattuck Cinemas (2230 Shattuck, Berk. 644-3370): call for times. Piedmont (4186 Piedmont at 41st St., Oakl. 654-2727): daily at 12:10, 2:30, 5, 7:30 and 9:55.

CRITIC'S CHOICE/Movies

In Fading Light

The liberal critic must remember that filmmaking by committee is bad but filmmaking by collective is good. This lament for the fishing industry was made by a collective and does happen to be good, if you're in the mood for its intense docu-fiction style. What's it all about? Alfie (Dave Hill) is highly respected by the simple fisherfolk of North Shields, England. But there aren't many fish anymore, and most of them are contaminated. Into this troubled, naturalistic setting comes Karen (Joanna Ripley), Alfie's daughter. She's having a midadolescence crisis and needs a change of scene. Alfie needs a cook on his fishing boat, and invites her into this misogynistic world where bonding opportunities abound on the bounding main, and daily life is fraught with enough drama that there's no need to invent melodrama. Arbitrarily selected subtitles get you past some of the thick accents, but make you dependent so you miss lines when they're withdrawn. This respectful look at workers will put you in the mood for Labor Day.

— Steve Warren

CRITIC'S CHOICE/Music

The Texas Tornados

Doug Sahm, Freddy Fender, Augie Meyers and Flaco Jimenez have been on the road longer than many of us have been alive, and still can lay down some solid rock. Sahm and Meyers are the core of the once-Frisco-based Sir Douglas Quintet; Fender's a Tex-Mex/country star, as welcomed at Johnny Ascuaga's Nugget in Reno as in music clubs like Slim's; Jimenez is a top-class accordionist who's graced many a star's recording, although his name is little known to the outside world. They've played with each other in various incarnations before, but this time, under the name of the Texas Tornados, they're touring in support of a self-titled record just out on Reprise. It's got high-class production values all over it, and the songs reach back into the repertoires of each of these artists' previous work — especially Sahm's — but it's still a cool collection of blues, Southwestern swing, country and rock rhythms, and the live show looks to be a helluva load of two-stepping fun.

son. Plays Thurs.-Sat. at 8 pm. Through Aug. 25. Third Street Parking Lot, Auto Park, Inc., Harrison and Bryant, SF. $5-$8. 753-8817.

■ The Merry Wives of Windsor Director Julian Lopez-Morillas transfers Shakespeare's prankish domestic farce from suburban Elizabethan England to rural Missouri, circa 1903. The Berkeley Shakespeare Festival production starts off slowly, but it builds in hilarity and warmth. By the last scene, the charming small town ambience, and the inventive performances of John Belucci as a bedeviled jealous husband and Robin Goodin Nordl as the dithering local fixer Mistress Quickly, have more than compensated for Ollie Nash's wan Falstaff. (Misha Berson) Through Aug. 25. Plays in repertory with Othello: Wed.-Sat. at 7 pm and Sun. at 2 pm, with selected Sat. and Wed. matinees at 2 pm. Through Aug. 25. John Hinkel Park, Southampton off Arlington, Berk. $10-$21. 525-8844.

■ Owls By Nature Theatre Au Naturel presents this absurd comedy. Plays Thurs.-Sat. at 8 pm. Through Aug. 25. La Val's Subterranean, 1834 Euclid, Berk. Call for price. 527-3123.

■ Boy's Life Encore Theater presents Howard Korder's portrait of '80s male behavior. Plays Tues.-Fri. at 8 pm. Sat. at 8 pm, or 6 and 9:30 pm. Through Aug. 26. ACT Playroom, 450 Geary, SF. $10. 562-6076.

■ Fear of Light Transformation Theatre presents this story of a family's efforts to heal their past and future. Plays Fri.-Sat. at 8 pm, Sun. at 7:30 pm. Through Aug. 26. Pacific Lutheran Theological Seminary, 277 Marin, Berk. $9-$12. 524-5072.

■ Shattered Secrets Transformation Theatre presents look at deep national and family secrets, childhood incest and abuse. Plays Mon. at 8 pm. Extended through Aug. 27. Pacific Lutheran Theological Seminary, 277 Marin, Berk. $9-$12. 524-5072.

■ Othello The Berkeley Shakespeare Festival presents this tragedy. Plays in repertory with The Merry Wives of Windsor: Wed.-Sat. at 7 pm and Sun. at 2 pm, with selected Sat. and Wed. matinees at 2 pm. Through Aug. 30. John Hinkel Park amphitheatre, Southampton off Arlington, Berk. $10-$21. 525-8844.

■ As You Like It Marin Shakespeare Company presents this romantic comedy.

Plays Thurs.-Sat. at 8 pm. Through Sept. 1. Forest Meadows Amphitheater, Dominican College, Grand and Arcadia, San Rafael. $12; $10 students and seniors; call for additional discount performances. 456-1626.

■ Curse of the Werewolf A perfectly silly musical spoof, and a lot of fun if you're in the right mood. Ken Hill's book has all the standard horror movie ingredients: a veddy British family on holiday in the 20s, a cowab-filled castle set within a gloomy forest, a mad German scientist, a pack of howling wolves and werewolves. The story is actually no big hairy deal, and it goes on too long. But Michael Smuin has staged it with such winking charm, and infused it with so many dances and clever bits of business (a Groucho-Margaret Dumont rose-in-teeth tango, a pastoral Dreyesque love duet, a gruesome transformation of man into beast) that it overcomes your resistance. It helps that the winning actors, many of them on hiatus from ACT, manage to carry on with blithe comic verve while not taking a minute of it too seriously. Other pluses: Rick Goodwin's imposing set, Beaver Bauer's splashy period costumes and a thriller-diller lighting design by Sara Linnie Slocum. (Misha Berson) Plays Tues.-Fri. at 8 pm, Sat. at 8:30 pm, Sun. at 7:30 pm, with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2:30 pm. Extended through Sept. 2. Theatre on the Square, 450 Post, SF. $22-$34. 433-9500.

■ House of Yes Wendy MacLeod's very dark send-up of American violence and decadence combines elements of Genet fables, Jacobean comedies and Andy Warhol films. It focuses on the upper-class members of a (literally) incestuous MacLean, Virginia clan. Mom is a glamorous alcoholic; her three grown kids are so spoiled and narcissistic they can barely function. (The loneliest is convinced she's Jackie Onassis and her brother is JFK.) When a "normal" stranger enters this den of weirdness, all psycho-sexual hell breaks loose. This show is a surprise hit for the Magic, and it's clear why: There's a wicked kinkiness at work here, some deliciously arch repartee and a few real dramatic shocks. But the comic tone wobbles periodically, and in the end you may wonder just how deep MacLeod's satire penetrates. Directed by Andrew Doe. (Misha Berson) Plays Wed.-Sat. at 8:30 pm. Extended

through Sept. 2. Magic Theatre, Fort Mason Center, Building D, Marina and Buchanan, SF. $11-$19. 441-8001 or 441-8822.

■ A Widow's Guide to Auto Repair Horsedreamer Theatre Company presents Michael Lynch's comedy set in a trailer park. Plays Fri.-Sun. at 8 pm. Through Sept. 2. Phoenix Theatre, 301 Eighth St., SF. $10-$12. 621-4423.

■ Grace Under Pressure Grace, an out-of-work New York actress, suddenly discovers her breasts are secret weapons: They tell her what to do when the going gets tough and zap unwelcome probers and unworthy suitors more effectively than a can of mace. Sound outlandish? You bet. But this bouncy feminist fable strikes back at misogyny with such good-humored zaniness, it defies you not to love it. Writer-actor Grace Walcott, a sort of fizzy hybrid of Little Bo Peep and Bette Midler, proves that feminists know how to dish out a joke as well as take one. With her sidekick Merry Ross, she converts fear and loathing into antic, even lusty comedy. (Misha Berson) Plays Fri.-Sat. at 9 pm. Extended through Sept. 6. Chi Chi Club, 440 Broadway, SF. $12. 392-6213.

■ Cymbeline The Berkeley Shakespeare Festival presents this Shakespearean play, set in pre-Christian England. Plays in repertory with The Merry Wives of Windsor and Othello: Wed.-Sat. at 7 pm and Sun. at 2 pm, with selected Sat. and Wed. matinees at 2 pm. Through Sept. 9. John Hinkel Park amphitheatre, Southampton off Arlington, Berk. $10-$21. 525-8844.

■ East Playwright Steven Berkoff blends Shakespearean-style verse and rough Cockney slang to voice the rage of young and old East Londoners in Thatcher's England. The fine young actors in this low-budget production deliver Berkoff's jumble of slum poetry with great panache, and their juicy physical moves bring it all back home. A violent, profane piece of work, but for all the right reasons. (Misha Berson) Plays Thurs.-Fri. at 8 pm, Sat. at 8 and 10:30 pm. Through Sept. 15. On Broadway Theatre, 435 Broadway, SF. $12. 434-1528.

■ Italian American Reconciliation John Patrick Shanley's fable for contemporary romantics. Plays Thurs.-Sun. at 8 pm. Through Sept. 16. Actor's Theatre, 533 Sutter, SF. $10. 296-9179.

■ Les Misérables More of a phenomenon than a show, but better than Cats if Broadway blockbusters are your thing. Just beware when you fork over your $50 for an orchestra seat that the songs are in the strained-vocal-chord pop school of Whitney Houston, the history and politics of revolutionary France are sketchy, and the tear-jerking is shameless and utterly synthetic. What works magnificently are the show's visual aspects, most obviously David Hersey's lighting and John Napier's production design. (Misha Berson) Plays Tues.-Sat. at 8 pm, with matinees Wed. and Sat. at 2 pm and Sun. at 3 pm. Extended through Sept. 16. Curran Theatre, 445 Geary, SF. $16-$55. 243-9001 or 474-3800.

■ Stand-Up Tragedy This Bill Cain play tackles life in a contemporary inner-city school. Plays Tues.-Sat. at 8 pm, with matinee performances Wed. and Sat.-Sun. at 2 pm. Through Sept. 16. Marines Memorial Theatre, Sutter at Mason, SF. $22-$34. 243-9001.

■ Okal's Magic This evening of theater features Okal the Master Magician. Plays Thurs.-Sat. at 7:30 pm, with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 3 pm. Through Sept. 23. Cannery Theatre, 2801 Leavenworth at Beach, SF. $10; $6 children under 12. 441-5560.

■ Bar None A comedy-mystery that starts off like the senior play at Harvey Milk High School turns into a laugh riot when the audience gets into the investigation in the second act. It ain't Art, despite some artful performances, but the long-running hit's a crowd-pleaser. (Steve Warren) Plays Wed.-Fri. at 8 pm, Sat. at 7 and 9:30 pm and Sun. at 2 pm. Open-ended. Mason Street Theatre, 340 Mason, SF. $18-$20. 861-8895.

■ Greater Tuna This compassionate satire of small-town Texas life barbecues bigots without robbing them of their humanity. Plays Mon.-Fri. at 8 pm and Sat. at 6 and 9 pm. Open-ended. Cable Car Theatre, 430 Mason, SF. $15-$19. 771-6900.

■ Murder Mystery Weekend This audience participation "Whodunit" by Keith O'Leary and Margo Morrison puts the audience at odds with incognito actors in solving a murder mystery during dinner. Plays Sat. at 7 pm. Open-ended. Charley's Cafe, Fisherman's Wharf, Beach and Jones, SF. $65. (800) 327-3862.

■ Party of One This musical revue pokes fun at the ups and downs of being single. Plays Fri. at 8 pm and Sat. at 7 and 9 pm. Open-ended. Zephyr Theatre, 25 Van Ness, SF. $18-$20. 861-8895.

Closing

■ Dark Circus First you wind your way through Bleak Street, a nasty midway that brings to mind Bob Dylan's "Desolation Row." Then you huddle on outdoor benches and watch an evil ringmistress commandeer a tacky, one-ring troupe through daredevil stunts that don't work, cheesy dance routines, and skits with a jagged Theatre of Cruelty edge. Though it needs rewriting to make it the political parable it was intended to be, this offbeat entertainment devised by Christy Ellis and Chris Brophy has strong atmospheric and the texture of broken dreams. The strong young cast includes Reed Kirk Rahimann as a washed-up magician, and Sarah Ellis an unforgettable wait-kiss "freak." (Misha Berson) Plays Sat. at 9 pm. Through Aug. 18. Eureka Theatre, 2790 16th St., SF. $9. 558-9898.

■ Dirty Dreams of a Clean-Cut Kid Whatever the results of the five characters' HIV tests, Henry Mach's and Paul Katz's premiering musical is positive in its attitude toward the AIDS epidemic and the changes it's wrought in gay male lifestyles. In the health center waiting room, the five reflect back on their lives in song, Chorus Line style. The absence of dialogue puts too much of the burden of character definition on the costumes, but gay men will find much relate to in the nostalgia and ultimately upbeat outlook. Bay Area Better!

"When the responses from my Guardian Relationship ad began coming in, I was receiving so many calls from outside of San Francisco (East Bay, Marin, the Peninsula) that I decided there wasn't a need to advertise in any additional Bay Area publications. So I cancelled my other advertising. Why pay double when you're reaching the same audience?"

Guardian Classified Works for the Gestalt Institute

"It definitely pays to advertise in the Bay Guardian. We consistently run a highly visible message that brings in more calls than any of our other advertising. Many responses come from people who say they've been looking at our ad for weeks before they finally decided to telephone. Our Guardian advertising has more than paid for itself over the years. The staff is superb — and always on top of everything."

RELATIONSHIP ADVERTISERS

RELATIONSHIP ADVERTISERS

Guardian Classified observes these policies in the following classifications: We do not want and will not accept advertising that has a sexual objective or mentions S & M, submissive or dominant. Any advertising that is sexually explicit or implicit will be rejected.

We do not want and will not accept advertising that offers anything of monetary value including living accommodations, gifts or trips in exchange for companionship.

The Bay Guardian has the legal right to reject any advertising for any reason whatsoever. If your ad is unacceptable we may notify you and give you the opportunity to rewrite it to our satisfaction.

Any mention of traveling to a specific location will be placed under Bulletin Board, Travel Companion Wanted.

* Personal abbreviations are limited to the following: M (male), F (female), W (white), B (black), A (Asian), J (Jewish), H (Hispanic) and G (gay).

* No last names, private addresses or telephone numbers are printed. You must use a commercial mail service, post office box or Guardian Box for replies.

* Guardian Boxes are for personal relationship replies only. The Bay Guardian does not allow commercial business solicitation or circulars of any nature to personal box holders. Mail of this type will not be forwarded.

* We do not correct most spelling or punctuation errors. $7 is charged for each copy change after submission or cancellation.

RELATIONSHIP ADVERTISERS/ READERS

TO PLACE YOUR RELATIONSHIP AD: Call Bay Guardian Classified At 255-7600 and charge it to any major credit card, or mail in your ad and payment with the Classified Coupon. To maximize the number of responses to your ad you will want to take advantage of PERSON-TO-PERSONALS. The Guardian's new Relationship Reply Line. It's the state-of-the-art in personal messaging systems... and it's FREE to Guardian Relationship Advertisers. PERSON-TO-PERSONALS gives you the opportunity to say a little more about yourself than in your printed ad, and it makes it easier for readers to respond. HOW IT WORKS: In addition to your ad in the paper, you will automatically be assigned a voicemail box number, with which you can record a 60-second outgoing message at no extra charge. Just call 251-6705 from a touch-tone phone, listen to the clear, step-by-step instructions, and record your greeting. You can hear your message played back before you save it, or you can change it and try again. Your message will go on-line within 24 hours (after it has been approved). It's best to record your message as soon as possible since we don't receive replies on our "browse" option even before our ad appears in print! TO HEAR REPLIES TO YOUR AD AND VOICEMAIL MESSAGE:

Call 251-6705 at no charge. Follow the instructions and listen to your replies as many times as you wish. When you hang up, your replies will be erased. If you decide to change your greeting, you'll have to wait another 24 hours before the new message appears on the system (but while you're waiting you will still be able to receive replies with the system message, which gives out only your box number).

WOMEN SEEKING MEN

Where is the strong-willed, gentle man who looks for me, a tall, Auburn-haired illustrator with a lean, muscular build? This 34-year-old, straight WF is part-time aerobics instructor and a Bay Area Working in second SF employed, almost a perfectionist, and truly soft-hearted, yet strong-willed, aggressively opinionated when the situation warrants it. You are physically fit, between 38 and 40, non-smoking, college grad, believe in God, respect women and people in general, looking for a committed, monogamous relationship. I am a product of the flat lands. It would help if you could cook. Guardian Box #47300F.

In Search Of...
Off-centered young woman seeks male counterpart for long-term centered relationship. You are difficult to find because like myself, you sometimes have a very off the wall sense of humor. Your passions include art, culture, music (rock & roll to classical), cooking, dancing, etc. Prefer 28-38, physically fit plus. Only monogamous, intelligent, classy and slightly eccentric types need respond. If you are marriage minded and this is your first time, please respond. Candis photo appreciated. Guardian Box #45302H.

Wanted: Great Guy

who loves bright, articulate, fun-loving, sexy, charming, professional, sensitive, independent, risk-taking, good-looking blondes. You support the 48ers (he has season tickets) and enjoy the symphony, theatre, and ballet. She is single WF 44. You are single WM preferably over 40 and balding. In good shape, non-smoking, and above all, good humored. I am looking for someone--much like myself--who is quite happy with his life and has a warehouse of good friends, but lacks a dynamic woman with whom to share a loving relationship. If you are up for a good run for your money, write Guardian Box #46308H.

Pretty, slender, leggy WF, 31, seeks older, married, wealthy WM, 35-45, Sacramento, SF, 2025 SF, 94118. Fiery, redheaded young, leggy, slim, fit and beautiful. Voluptuous Vixen
If Rita Hayworth were a size 20 she'd look like me, 33, 5'8", brunette, smiling blue Irish eyes looking for single male who loves city life. Me: Intelligent, energetic, fun, sexy, and a dancer/comedian, professional model, loves theater, opera, films, travel, dancing from waltz to lambada. You: educated, witty, cultured, and physically fit. 45, possess a sense of humor, style, integrity, adventure. No smoke, drugs, bigotry. Letter/photo. 684 Mission, Box 224, SF 94105. #45306F

Passionate And Successful
Highly intelligent, headstrong, playful, romantic, successful, entrepreneur involved in a multitude of enterprises, all legal, handsome, charming, witty. Long dark hair, sparky eyes, quick to laugh and cry, outgoing, a little overbearing, usually shy with young, beautiful, psychologically grounded women. I prefer women from healthy families who have worked in the medical field, Asia or Europe. My life is a paradoxical irony. The women I have found myself with take advantage of my sensitivity and naivete (I am a sensitive, vulnerable person). I need to find you someone that I don't have to protect myself from. I am ready to open up my heart, my strengths and my weaknesses to you, a woman looking female 19-25 to become my companion, business partner, lover and friend for a shared abundance that few couples have. My goals: honesty, commitment, pleasure, travel. Respond to POB 4948, Oakland 94605. #47102F

Half Grizzly Bear, Half Woolly Monkey

Late 30's single man (teenager in disguise) successful, entrepreneur involved in a multitude of enterprises, all legal, handsome, charming, witty. Long dark hair, sparky eyes, quick to laugh and cry, outgoing, a little overbearing, usually shy with young, beautiful, psychologically grounded women. I prefer women from healthy families who have worked in the medical field, Asia or Europe. My life is a paradoxical irony. The women I have found myself with take advantage of my sensitivity and naivete (I am a sensitive, vulnerable person). I need to find you someone that I don't have to protect myself from. I am ready to open up my heart, my strengths and my weaknesses to you, a woman looking female 19-25 to become my companion, business partner, lover and friend for a shared abundance that few couples have. My goals: honesty, commitment, pleasure, travel. Respond to POB 4948, Oakland 94605. #47102F

Attractive Physician
33, 5'11", 160 lb, sincere, romantic, seeks bright, happy, easy going woman to share life and laughter. Photo appreciated. 204 East Second Street, #238, San Mateo 94401.

Kind Heart, Boyish Grin
Seeking an intelligent, warm-hearted, funny and energetic single WF, 26-35, who is sincere, fit and playful. Like me, you are attracted to each other's content and honest, enjoy cycling, hiking, back-rubs and ballet. Don't smoke or use drugs, are independent but emotionally accessible, and want children. I'm an athletic, Ivy-educated, professional, and financially secure, single WM, 32, 5'11", 165, with a job I love, a large library, an art for music, and a black Labrador. Photo appreciated. Guardian Box #47103F.

Artistic Sailor
seeks laid-back woman for romantic relationship. Me: blond hair, blue eyes, good looking, 6'1", over 40. Enjoy eclectic activities: sailing, bicycling, art museums, opera, films, and food and joie de vivre. Need intellectual stimulation. No funky hair-dos, drugs. Photo, phone Guardian Box #46114F.

Semi-Retired Professional
Divorced, Jewish WM, 60's, slim, active, man who enjoys actively and financially secure, seeks similar partner, late 40's/early 50's. Box 150484, Marin 94915-0484.

To Respond To A Box Number
If the box number is followed by a "u" you can call 800-844-5555 from a touch-tone phone (pay phones won't work), and reply to the ad of your choice on the Guardian Relationship Reply Line. You'll learn more about the advertiser than what's in the paper by simply listening to their outgoing Person-to-Personals message. Not all advertisers record a message, but you can still respond by phone. Just follow the easy, recorded instructions. When you're asked for the advertiser's box number, enter it using the telephone keypad. Do not enter the letter at the end of the number. After you hear the advertiser's greeting, you will be able to record a message of your own, review it, change it (if you wish), or try again. The cost is only .99 per minute. If the box number is also followed by a "u" you can write to the ad at the following address: Guardian Box #520 Hampshire Street, San Francisco, CA 94110. Guardian mail boxes expire four weeks after the ad's final publication. Address other replies as instructed in the ad. However, the ads that contain a box number and "u" but no "u" can be written to ONLY if they have a post office box outside the Guardian. If you have any questions please call us at 255-7600.

"Rob", Box 729, Sausalito 94965. #48110

You're somewhat tomboyish. I'm quite a feminist. You're not into make-up and all that junk, just effortlessly cute. Real short hair a plus. You're 22 to 35, under 5'7" and seeking a committed relationship. Things I/we like: egalitarianism, being down to earth, pragmatism, frugality, sharing, honesty, non-egoism, romance, sensuality, humor, open-mindedness, adventuresome, spontaneity, privacy, outdoors, hiking, exploring, camping, secluded beaches, winter sports, old movies, cooking, gardening, antiques. Dislikes: egotists, yuppies, jocks, workaholics, spendthrifts, metaphysics, hypochondriacs, ballgames, loud music, parties, nightclubs, crowds. I'm white, wear a blue collar, smoke but don't drink, and truly enjoy my middle class world. Please call me. #45119 Single WM, 33, from Yugoslavia, 5'11", brown hair and eyes, seeks single WF with traditional values for a warm marriage. Please send photo. Guardian Box #45107A.

Hey Wait A Minute

It seems as if I'm always seeing the people I'd like to meet as I'm running in the Marina or Mt. Tam or cycling on a road somewhere. Somehow, we seem to be going at different paces or in opposite directions. If you are an active woman interested in a committed, fun relationship with a mid-forties, athletic professional pick up the phone or write a note. I'm a 46-year-old, 5'10", 160 lbs, single WM trying without much success to grow up. I'm looking for a rare person who enjoys the outdoors and understands the joys of athletic participation and enjoys quiet romantic evenings after a full day. Extra points if you've done a century and you know why I'll be in NY November 4 and Palm Springs November 24. The right person is certainly welcome. Say hello next time we pass. MEN SEEKING MEN

What Is Browse?

Advertisers: When you record your outgoing message on Person-to-Personals it will go into our Browse feature. When a respondent calls the Person-to-Personals 900 line, they can preview (listen to) the category of their choice. Your outgoing message can start to generate replies days before your ad appears in print.

Respondents:

There is more than one way to find that special someone through the Bay Guardian personals ads. Maybe you need to "browse" to find the right person. Call 1-900-844-5555, choose your category, and listen to some of the fun, interesting people who are looking for their new relationship. You don't need a copy of the Bay Guardian to respond, in fact some of the messages you hear may be previews of ads that aren't even in the Guardian yet!

USE US YOUR CLASSIFIED AD BY MONDAY NOON. START GETTING RESULTS ON WEDNESDAY!

Announcing Our Special Late Deadline for Employment and Real Estate Advertisers

Maybe the ad you ran in the Sunday paper didn't work. Maybe you wanted to run in the Guardian, but missed our regular Friday deadline. Or maybe you got a brilliant idea on Monday morning that can't wait until next weekend. Then our new Monday Noon late deadline is designed for you.

Now the Bay Guardian Classified will accept any Employment or Real Estate line rate ad (sorry — no display ads or other categories) until 12:00 noon the Monday before publication. At no extra charge.

If you're an employer or agency looking for qualified personnel, we've just made it easier for you. And if you're looking to sell a home, hold an open house, rent an apartment or space or share a rental, our new deadline lets you react quickly to the market — and get the word out before the weekend.

To find out more about this new service, call 255-7600 for rates and information. But don't wait too long. After all, in business, timing is everything.

At Last. A Bold New Publication That Takes the East Bay Seriously.

FOR YEARS, our East Bay readers have been asking us for more copies of the San Francisco Bay Guardian, calling our offices to ask for locations of outlets and racks and demanding a wider East Bay Circulation. And for years, they've also been calling for more Guardian coverage of East Bay news, arts and entertainment.

Finally, all that is about to change for one week out of every month, with the debut of the new East Bay Guardian. Beginning on August 29, 1990, the East Bay Guardian will be published on the last Wednesday of each month — in addition to the weekly Bay Guardian. This all-new edition will have its own circulation of 80,000 copies, distributed exclusively throughout the East Bay. It's a wholly separate publication, created for an East Bay audience with an East Bay point of view.

A Renewed Commitment to the East Bay.

FOR NEARLY a quarter of a century, The San Francisco Bay Guardian has covered the East Bay as an integral part of our historic commitment to a better brand of independent journalism — one that's responsive to the life of the entire Bay Area community. In fact, because of our longtime involvement in the East Bay, many people have come to believe that the Guardian is actually published in Berkeley! It's not, of course, but we're proud of the fact that so many East Bay readers feel that the Guardian is their newspaper... one that knows about and cares about what goes on on the sunnier side of San Francisco Bay.

That kind of loyalty is not going unrewarded. Because now, with the publication of the East Bay Guardian, we're expanding our commitment to the bright side of the Bay. We're dedicated to taking the East Bay more seriously than ever, with a fresh viewpoint that will cover East Bay news, arts and entertainment as only the Guardian can.

Editorial Excellence, East Bay Style.

THE overriding goal of the East Bay Guardian is to be a mirror to the East Bay, showing the community as itself — unique, vibrant, diverse, a vital urban area all its entertainment scene, delivering the kinds of news, reviews, previews and interviews that reflect the creativity and energy of the East Bay spirit as never before. We'll show you the shows you don't want to miss and the people worth watching on the stages and in the theatres and galleries with an attitude that is fresh, energetic and insightful.

Wherever You Go in the East Bay, You'll Find The East Bay Guardian.

THE East Bay Guardian will be available just about anywhere you live, work and play — in prime retail outlets, clubs, cafes, bookstores and hundreds of other convenient spots. Along with our exciting expansion in coverage of the East Bay, we're also expanding our circulation area for this new edition. Each month, 80,000 copies of the East Bay Guardian will be distributed at key locations throughout Oakland, Berkeley, Emeryville, Albany, Alameda, Piedmont and Montclair. And we'll reach further into Contra Costa County than ever with distribution to El Cerrito, Walnut Creek, Lafayette, Concord, Orinda, Moraga, San Ramon, Alamo and Danville.

The East Bay Guardian will be prominently placed in East Bay BART stations for the highest visibility and the convenience of commuters. The number of Bay Guardian racks will more than double throughout the East Bay, and Oakland circulation will increase dramatically. The East Bay Guardian will also play a starring role at key special events, with extra distribution — and extra availability.

Now There's a Bay Guardian for Both Sides of the Bay.

WE'VE USED a lot of superlatives to convey some of the excitement we feel at bringing the East Bay Guardian to life. We feel it's a vital and necessary addition to the East Bay, and an indispensable resource for our readers. The East Bay has always been a part of the Bay Guardian. And beginning on August 29th, the Bay Guardian will be a part of the East Bay. Now we're taking both sides of the Bay more seriously.

And now, whichever side of the Bay Bridge you call home, we're really on your side.
